"Electronic Arts is considering creating a television show based on 'The Sims'. The show would allow viewers to vote on what the avatars in the show would do. From the article: "One idea could be that you're controlling a family, telling them when to go to the kitchen and when to go to the bedroom, and with this mechanism you have gamers all over the world 'playing the show.'"

At least that article is good for something!

Quote:"It's the subtleties, the eyes, the mouth -- 5,000 polygons doesn't really sell the emotion. With PS3 and XBox 2, we can go on the main character with 30,000-50,000 polygons," he said. "With that increased firepower, the 'Finding Nemo' video game looks just like the movie, but in real time."

I hereby declare EA to be desperate.

Wanna place bets on how many Sims-fanboys watch this crap?

Yes, but by the time those consoles come out, 4th quarter, computers will probably be able to handle twice that anyway

I have come to a realization: EA is not a company...it spreads to new areas, consumes all their resources, then spreads even farther, consuming more and more. There is another organism which behaves this way...a virus. EA is a virus.

EA are really gay and desparate. The game wasn't mind blowing to begin with or any of the 50 expansions. What makes them think a goddamn TV show will be any different?

before they edited somebodyWhat makes EA think people will watch this show?

The vast majority of computer owners who buy the game thinking it will be good because loads of others have bought it then put it down after 2 days and leave it to decompose.
