This is the buisness of all of America when an innocent woman is put into a death camp and being starved to death, then when Your state and the nations fucktard judges agree that's okay to do.

Sniper, how about your fat ass not eat for the next 3 weeks. I bet you couldn't even do till midnight tonight you piece of shit. your going to burn in hell for laughing at that.

They should jsut put her out of her misery and give her a lethal injection. Who wants to be a vegetable the rest of their life? Then having your feeding tube taken out then put back in several times. Then debates and crap whether to keep it out or keep it in, that just sucks. Put her out of her misery, staving to death would suck and so would being a vegetable the rest of your life. Lethal injection = quick and painless.

Jeb Bush, our state governor, has been leading the front to keep her alive. He's our state representative. The only people allowing this to happen are Judge Greer and others who'd rather let her die than give her a chance to live.

I'd hate to live in a nation where your living will needs to be made before you can be kept alive, otherwise life support won't last too long.

Jeb Bush tried, yes that is true. But not hard enough. Saying he and or his brother can do no more is bullshit. You can't tell me he doesn't have more power than some judge in a small county. If he REALLY wanted her to live he'd risk his office and go get her instead of worrying about votes or w/e is stopiing him from doing so.

Actually, the right-to-die side has a ridiculously weak argument that works only in a legal setting.

But then again, the only reason it has any strength is because the right-to-life argument can't support itself in court very well.

With coma's, and its not like on tv where you just lie there for years on end with your eyes closed, if you don't wake up within 30 days the chances of your ever recovering are minimal, at best.

She has been there 15 or so years, no improvement. Only her brainstem functions. Even of she was kept alive, she would never get better.

As for living wills. That's what the court have been arguing about all this time, and it hasn't been just one judge. She had no living will, so it had to be established what her intentions would have been. Over and over they have agreed that she would not want to live this way, if you can call it living. Without enough grey matter you cant even call it existing.

You are right; wrong word. Its been described more as a none responsive vegetative state. Although I am still sure about her making no (,almost no- i'm not 100%) progress in 15 years. I think I will have to go and do some reading on this to make sure I have a good grasp of the situation.

No, he'd be saving an innocent human life. Fuck separation of powers clause. I'm all for law and order, but at times you've gotta go with your gut and do what's right and this is right.

Quote:She has been there 15 or so years, no improvement. Only her brainstem functions. Even if she was kept alive, she would never get better.

She has never been given rehabilitation, (spelt wrong) You have no idea what condition she could be in and you can't say she that over the past 15 years she couldn't have possibly gained SOME function back if it would have been allowed. But the saint of a husband (*cough bullshit*) has ordered there be none. Yea he really cares about his wife doesn't he, and don't forget his mistress either. Yes after the things she's gone through now with the starvation she's probably done for no matter what we do. It sucks, this whole situation sucks.

I wont call her husband a monster. From what I have read he has not left her side, and has made sure that her care upuntil now has been good.

- this is what I have learned so far, but by no means a real fact, i could be wrong-

She has only has two bed sores in all this time. This is unheard of and remarkable. He could have whored him self to the media, but has not.

There have been pictures of her brain posted on the internet, and they show that Terri's brain is not damaged, it's wrecked, no cortex to speak of, allot of it has been replaced by fluid. You need your cerebral cortex to be you, without you are not a person.

Rehabilitation can only happen if the person can respond, speech and sound therapy only work on a person who is cognitive. I don't know if Terri has even been cognitive, so I cant rely comment. But I do know that without therapy a person will make little if any progress.

If i'm wrong about any of this, feel free to flame...

Not necessarily true. We know where the body interacts with the consciousness and we know what factors may affect the consciousness, but no doctor in the world knows where the conscious IS. It is unfair to assume it is where we can grasp it, and judge Terri's life based on that. For all any of us know, she is still in that shell attempting to communicate but can't.

That does not mean she is dead, and it does not mean she isn't "there" anymore, if you know what I mean.

I also agree with you, somewhat. I don't think her husband is necessarily a monster. I think he is tired of caring and supporting her and not seeing any kind of improvement. He wants to let her go and move on (and already has, somewhat) as morbid as that sounds. However, I do believe that he should just allow her parents to continue to care for her until she finally does die.

I agree. There is no way of knowing what makes a person conscious. i was reading about stephen hawking. He has motor neurone disseise and can barley move or interact with the out side world. yet he is one of the smartest people on earth. Surly there are tests for activity of — brain waves, electrical activity — were they done on this woman?

I would hate to think of such an end. Dying and not being able to tell any one. But I would also hate to be kept alive with no chance of getting better.

Just thinking about this is depressing enough, but knowing that one day I might have to go threw it my self, that terrifies me. I think its time to update my will. I'm 21 and I have written 3 so far.
