Agh, I am wanting to transfer my domain to goDaddy, the day after my domain expired on ehost and now ehost is wanting me to renew my domain with them before I can transfer it, WTF. Their service was absolut crap. It was expensive first of all, often slow to redirect to my other domain, now and then it would not function at all, and once they lost the information as to where my domain was to redirect to. It was not a good experience at all. And now they want me to pay another $15 to renew the domain just so I can transfer it to godaddy.

Let it expire and be up for purchase and then immediately buy it on GoDaddy?

It already expired, but godaddy says it's taken. I did a whois lookup and my contact information is till there for it. Apparently even though it expired ehost is still hosting it and saying that I am the owner but they will not let me transfer it untill I renew the domain. It's just showing some random page at the moment.

Looks like shitty advertising to me...

VS Godaddy's $9/Year.

Who sells domains for $35 a year?

Unfortunately, that's how it works. You had to make the transfer before it expired. Your only option is to renew with ehost, wait for 45 days, then transfer it to GoDaddy.

Oh, and by the way, I am currently doing well in the interview process at GoDaddy and might be working there soon, so transfer it and help pay my possible paycheck.

I'm just going to get a new domain instead of renewing with them. I win they lose. How long do you think it would be before they stop hosting my domain?

They should delete it in 30-60 days, though depending on how shitty they are it may take longer.
