I decided that I don't care about the flaming and I shouldn't let it bother me. So I am back. I was wondering what a good FPS game would be that will take me a long time to beat. Something extremely hard and fun. So if anyone knows about any extremely hard to beat FPS games, please let me know.

Hay, your back.

The only ones I can suggest are for the pc. Halo combat evolved. Farcry.

Far cry would be my best advise.

And deadfive, you are slowly starting to learn it. Maybe in the end will be less annoying. Just like alot of people have forgotten Alostoul is the banned SWEET guy indisguise.

Well, you're on a fine track. As for your question, Far Cry is good extremely hard though, Doom 3 is pretty long took me a solid 12 hours to get to the delta labs (Not for those who get scared easilly). HL1 and HL2 are both great games, I highly recommend them. I beat hl2 in about 15 hours, and I'm still working on HL1. I had alot of fun with CoD too. That took me about 15 hours to beat that. I wouldn't get Halo PC unless you have a monster rig, Halo PC is one of the most unoptimized games I've ever played.

His grammar improved too...

Deus Ex 1 is really fun and long... Also, FarCry is hard.

Half-Life 2 took me 6 days to beat, on normal...

a game thats hard to beat ?

games concentrate more on graphics than actual content
no game is hard to beat they are all to easy

Tooncy is right , Halo: Combat evolved takes a huge amount of resources. The game is poorly optimized as he said. It takes about as much resources as doom 3 to run , If not more!

I reccomend Doom 3 though. The game is really long. I still haven't beat it. I don't really have a lot of time for gaming though.

Check out brothers in arms: Road to hill 30 too. I've barely scratched the surface of that game but it's really fun.

Half life 2 was good but not very long. It was really fun but the story wasn't too great.

Half-Life 2 is longer than Half-Life 1, and half-Life 1 is long. It's just not a very challenging game unless you actually play it on hard (which most people don't). The story may not seem great until you actually play the first one. I've noticed A LOT of people saying it's confusing, and almost ALL of them saying they haven't played the first one... WELL DUH!!!

Halo 1 isn't very optimized because they did a shitty job compiling it from Xbox to PC.

Brothers in Arms is really great, but I beat it in two nights, lol.

The only challenging game I can really think of is FarCry like some others have suggested. On the hardest setting it'll be a bitch to complete.

I guess HL2 is sort of hard, but there was only one bit I struggled to do.

I cannot believe that I forget deux ex! That is one of the best games I have ever played. I must have played that one threw 10 or 20 times.

I didn't realise that halo was a bad conversion. That explains why I can't use the higher setting.

I've played half life , It was longer than half life 2 I think. At least half life 2 felt shorter to me. I'm not really sure , Maybe just because I played it all the time when I first got it.

I still don't think the story is very good. Half life 2 kind of gives you small hints as to what happened but never really explains all too well what happened. Hopfully the coming expansion pack will help that out.

I'm really anxious to see the coming previews

I'd still say go with Doom 3 though then grab the Ressurrection of evil expansion. I'm getting it friday even though i haven't beat doom 3 yet.

FarCry
Call Of Duty
United Offensive
Doom 3

FarCry had the best single play I'd have to say. Took a while to do and the storyline was excellent along with the graphics.

Call Of Duty was very close though, very tough on Veteran mode. Extremely realistic on veteran mode, 1 or 2 shots and your dead, no health kits and your teammates actually do stuff rather than get themselves killed.

United Offensive was about the same as the above, but there was more tanks in this one. And now there are tanks in multi-player.

Doom 3 is very fun, storyline is somewhat uninformative, but then again John Carmack isn't known as "Uber 1337 storyline maker" however, he is an "Uber 1337 game programmer" Doom 3 has excellent graphics and the single player is very tough and scary.

Play the Half-Life series all the way through, Half-Life, Opposing Force, Blue Shift, then Half-Life 2. If that doesn't eat up a goodly chunk of time, nothing will.

Look to older games if you want difficulty and length at the same time. You just won't find a really hard, really long FPS anymore.

Wnxcabal had asked me, "What is RenCom Networks all about?", it is a new website I am working on that will have a chat room, forums, and more. It will mostly be for all the members of RenGen but will be available to the public as well. All the graphics will be done by me and all the site design as well. It will be a great project for me and fun too. RenCom Networks is all about just having a little Renegade chat is all.

Renegade Communications Networks coming soon. Hopefully I can get it done by the end of the month.

What gives you that idea? Valve hasn't screwed up on anything (besides Steam), and did a great job on Half-Life 2. I don't understand why you have the idea that Valve is going to screw up on the expansion of Half-Life 2.

Quote:The expansion will take place immediately after the conclusion of Half-Life 2 and will see Freeman and Alyx fleeing from City 17 and its impending destruction. "You and Alyx are leading the flight from the city getting up close and personal with some of the creatures and sights from the end of the game," says Laidlaw.

Well I hope they pull that off pretty convincingly. I just hate it when sequels change the ending of the story it's trying to continue.
