- 1) Pick a name
- 2) Make sure you know what you want it to be about
- 3) Take your time
- 4) Don't do what I did and ask 1,000,000 questions a day
- 5) Make it and have fun doing it

My ideas for names are as follows:

Gamer-X
Gamer Generation
Game-Tech

A website for a variety of games is always nice as long as the site is updated frequently. Good luck on making your website if you decide to do so.

No offense but you probably aren't capable of a one man gaming website. The public look for reviews of EVERY new game on the market, a place to buy games cheaply, populated forums, tech support, and oads of other things.

For starters, you need a host with a large amount of webspace and a large amount of bandwidth as well as didicated staff and well thought out tech support.

That however is for a website covering different genres of games and different types of consoles aswell.

Making a website based on 1 game or series is alot easier, you stil need the basics such as reviews, previews, screenshots, game features, strategies, downloads (SKINS, maps, utilities etc.), populated forums, contact details and daily news information amongst other things.

a few good examples are:

<http://www.cncden.com>

<http://www.planetunreal.com>

What DJM said.

and GDIDF. Deadfive's website is an insult to the internet.

If you want to really get going. Learn PHP and write a dynamic webpage. Which deadfive hasn't done.

And make sure to keep it populated. <http://www.emptv.com> <- read that before starting a forum. Prevent a rengen style website from happening

And I mean rengen uses a freehost ffs. Dont use a freehost. Go buy a domain and webspace. <http://www.123reg.com> for a domain and sh3lls.net for hosting. Sh3lls is quite reliable and cost effective.

You don't need a credit card moron. If you truly do plan to turn your shitty rengen into a company. You would know you could use paypal. With a bankcard or some other service. But then again you forgot to change the title of your webpage from the default title. Which shows you did not even design your own page.

Well, get Abyss Web Server. Providing you have a fair upload speed, you can host it from your computer, and all you need to do is save the files to the HTDOCS directory in the Abyss Web Server folder, and they appear on your site! You need a domain name or a subdomain though, I reccomend <http://freedns.afraid.org> for that.

Abyss Web Server: <http://www.aprelium.com>
Free DNS: <http://freedns.afraid.org>

You need to connect to your site using your IP address otherwise.

Maybe I can help you set it up, but the Aprelium community is nice too

Hell, if you get REAL desperate, create a Geocities page. www.geocities.com

Name ideas: RunNGun (A picture of a person running around shooting at enemies. A pile of bodies would be a nice touch.) FragPile (I would suggest a picture of Frag grenades in Halo for this site's main page.) and Sniper'sPost (Any Sniper in any game that can be recognised as so. Halo is a good one.)

Geocities really sucks. I found that Freewebs was better, even with the low amount of anything. So what if they dont describe anything? Say you like to snipe alot - SnipersPost. This means you can tell people more about sniping if you wish to do so. If you like to basically Kamikaze, then choose RunNGun. You can tell people all about being a Kamikaze person in the group, and the best weapons to use. FragPile is obvious. "Frag Out!" comes to mind when i think of this phrase. If you want to just a strictly gaming site, no real curve to anything, then just have it, like; GameHunter or something. Geocities is bad, but its completely free up to a limit, and its pretty easy to make a site from scratch. I should know, ive made myself a site that actually works! In every page theres a certain picture you can click on to go back to the index page. Ive got one thats a picture of a giant D20 rolling over someone. When you keep your mouse over it for a second, it states something like this: "You have just been killed by the worlds largest D20. Click here to go back to the Index page, and try again." Truthfully, if i ever made a gaming site, it wouldnt really be like, say, www.cncden.com where you get to download things. It more so be a Forum, with special sections for Snipers, Grenadiers, Shotgunners, Pistoleers and whatnot. I would try to stay on the Grenadier/Sniping areas, so as not to give people poor advice in the Shotgunner and such areas. Im the worst Shotgunner you can find, usually. Ill have a look at FreeWebs, and see what i think of it compared to Geocities.

This is why you don't make a website. rolls eyes

Firstly, gaming website need to do something that sets them apart from the other little gaming communities.

Secondly... wtf?! An area for each class? "I was in this one game where we, like, totally wasted the other team! It was, like, so cool, because, like, they didn't understand how we, like..."

Lastly, CNCden has a very successful forum, because they deliver content everyone likes.
<http://forums.cncden.com/>

Geocities. Sucks. End. They can't host a gaming site, unless the gaming site has no downloads. Even then images can take up a lot of space after a while.

Cheers.

The name is one of the most important keys in making a website. It needs to describe the content you plan to set before the community. For example, if you did name your website sniper-post, and then you go into the website and it is all about, oh lets say, Doom 3, then what kind of website is that? When people use search engines, say they search for "snipers" and it comes up with your website called sniper-post, when they go inside and see that it has nothing to do with snipers, they are disappointed. You are just causing people away by having a "fake" name describing content that has nothing to do with the name. The name describes your content, mostly.

SnipersPost is taken, i just made it into a site. Very much under construction. Yeah, Geocities sucks. And no, im not just about a single game. Currently i only have one area where ive got anything. Well, two, really: Home, and "Halo Sniper" where im going to start posting Halo Sniping tips. Im going to have Renegade Sniper, Unreal Sniper, and other games. Also, for games that havent been covered, im going to have "Other Sniper" which is just a compilation of different games that havent otherwise been listed. If you go to the site home, you can tell what i eventually want to do with it. And the only time im going to describe a game i was in, its going to be as a demonstration, im not gonna ONLY tell people about my games. CnC Den is not just good because they have a forum, they also have whats called MONEY. Ive got almost no money, and little talent in designing websites. Ive got all of three, technically. One is a picture for one of my Yahoo! characters, one is a website for the bar that another character owns, and the other is the SnipersPost. J Ball, thank you. Since deaddumbass over there hasnt read this post(hasnt been posted yet) then i wont start telling him off, however, i will refer him to one the beginning parts of it.
