For it to work you need to type the email address that you registered that username under as it sends it to that address. You cant just type in any email address, if that was the case, that would mean others could get your password.

I am actually amazed the images still work on that page, most of the WOL internet pages are black with a horde of broken image links

I might have a go at re-doing the webpages. Should not be oo hard to do.

Very easily. The only problems are cosmetic. The soucre code can be easily intergrated. However i may need to ask EA for some help, even though i doubt they would give any access.

Even if their was, he probably entered a spoofed email address at the start, so gaining his password is next to impossible.

The reason for not using a real email address, or a spoofed one is that there is no bother to confirm the address anymore. Your accounts work as soon as you have registered it. The only reason for using a real email address is so that people who forget them can retrieve them.
