1) C&C: Reborn
2) RA: A Path Beyond
3) Core Patch 2
4) or...none will finish?

(Not trying to be rude or anything..just asking what do you think..I wish they all came out soon..)

I'm thinking the third one...CP2

Number 1 will never come out; number 2 won't come out for at least six more months; I have no idea how much progress has been made on number 3.

EDIT: I just realized how disgusting that sounds....

I know sometimes it seems as though we take "too long" on our projects, we have always delivered. You thought RenGuard was never going to come out but it did. You thought CP1 wouldn't be done but it was finished. CP2 is shaping up to be bigger than we first expected and involving more people than we had at the start. It will be done, we just want to get it right.

Oi, I've been led to belive that hell freezes as result of Dead6 being released. And yes, there are some patches released during the first long pause between upcoming major events, and I also left out certain geopolitical events such as EA buying the rights to the former Soviet Union and all associated territory.

Dead 6 lives up to its name as being dead, so don't expect it out anytime within 10 years.

C4commando is lead by a retard from Europe called Seaman. I'm still wondering why he begged for artwork from Renegade in 2000, then squandered it to move on to another engine which he has no knowledge of or ability to support. Oh well, at least it's funny to watch D6 and C4 fail together.

I think it will be close tie between reborn and cp2. Reborn will be out within 4-5 months (my estimate based on there forums and interviews and personal experiance), CP2 seems to have gained some momentum recently though with the help of WD, so i guess cp2 sooner then Reborn... my opinion...

Considering Reborn hasn't released anything since 24 December of 2003... That's enough of a reason in and of itself. Search the forum for the rest of the reasons, it's not that hard to find. Just search for "Reborn sucks" and you'll understand.

Just search for "RenAlert Ingame anything", you really should of put some thought into how you were to magically rig your models in battlefield 2.

Well, first of all, we never said or implied that anything posted was shown ingame when it wasn't. And secondly, RenAlert has nothing to do with Battlefield 2, and has been released for a couple years with many ingame screenshots posted.

I'm sure you find tons, since there were 2-5 ingame shots of just about every update ever made for RenAlert. Hell, you could even take it to the next step by downloading it and just playing it for yourself.

Last time I checked, it was still occasionally played, and heavily played up until we cancelled it in favor of RA:APB. And the past doesn't change, so checking again won't alter that...

Quote:perhaps if renakert had done that their mod might have been played online for more than a few months....
That is what we did... First the mod had low detailed and innacurate weapons/vehicle, then I started redoing them, and creating new ones, now earlier ones are being redone and the more detailed ones are just being upgraded. And yet we've managed to actually release the mod, with many updates in a timely fashion, and the team only consisted of just one modeler, one texture artist, two riggers/programmers/etc., and one mapper.

And lets compare, Renegade Alert, which was played quite a bit for the majority of when it was supported (much more then a few months), and is still played some... Versus Reborn, which isn't really played at all, and was played very little when it was released due to being really buggy, and just bad.

It's unfair to expect a playable release on two different engines from us when the second engine has only been purchaseable for only around a month; and foolish to tolerate a nearly unplayable 'release' from another team working on the older engine for such a painfully long time, well after we abandoned that older engine.

one thing I don't get is why the RA team don't try to earn money from their work. I spoke to a friend of the man who made most of the buildings and background scenery in GTA:vice city, which aren't all that good, average at best, and was told the guy earned an 80,000 bonus on top of millions for doing that and leading a team of programmers.

some of those buildings in renalert, like the soviet power plant, are good enough to be included in big multimillion dollar games and are way better than the quality of those buildings in vice city, which earned the modeller so much cash. Did you guys do a course at college or something? i'm doing something like that this august...

Someone has been telling you porkies.

The scenery in Vice City was done by a large team of artists, none of whom earn "millions". The 5-figure bonus is a distinct possibility, though.

Subject: Re: Which will come out first?

Besides that, it's illegal...

Subject: Re: Which will come out first?

The theme for the forums will beat all of those things. I just can't justify doing a "cosmetic" thing when I have a script kiddie messing with my Renegade server. That problem popped up after I saw my server drop from WOL a couple weeks ago. I did some looking back and some graphing and found out whenever my server hit 10 people or so, down it went. That made my server problem become my top priority.

I'm pretty much at the point now where I can resume work on the less important things like skinning these forums, though I really want to migrate the other forums I run to this software before the next phpBB exploit comes out (which should be in about 3-4 days, right?)

Im currently enrolled in ITT Tech and there are 4 years for the course of stufy im on. First 2 years get you an associates in multimedia, and the 2 after that get you a bachelors in video game design. Average salaray for a video game designer is 49,000 a year.
