How the Hell would we know your god damned Firewall Serial Number? Look it up at your manufacturer's website or something, dipshit. God damn, you people and your questions. For every good question I find here or in the RenGuard Tech. Support sub-forum, there are at least five really, really stupid ones, I swear. And furthermore, what the Hell does your Firewall have to do with Command & Conquer: Renegade?

Quote:you do not need to respond if your not going to help,I'd help if I thought it was a valid request as opposed to an asinine query typed some someone who obviously failed English 101.

Quote:second most of all fw have serial numbers witch can be found, i don't know where mine is....thats why iam asking!I'll assume that means "Firewall". As far as I know, Windows XP Service Pack 2's Firewall doesn't have a serial number; it uses your Windows XP serial number for verification purposes, as part of Service Pack 2. Are you running some sort of outside Firewall? Or do you perhaps mean a router of some kind?

If you meant a router -- "A device in a network that handles message transfer between computers" -- then I suggest you do a little research on that type of computer hardware. Your router's serial number should be listed right on the hardware, generally on the bottom. Once you have the brand name and the serial number, a Google search should help.

If you're running some sort of application Firewall -- "Any of a number of security schemes that prevent unauthorized users from gaining access to a computer network or that monitor transfers of information to and from the network." -- then I suggest you hit the Firewall's personal website. ZoneAlarm's website, for example, can be found at <http://www.zonelabs.com/>. Again, a Google search might also prove fruitful.

There. I've helped. Happy now?

Edit: We can see your username, you know. It's wholely unnecessary to "sign" your messages at the tail end like that. This isn't e-mail.

ok sorry for calling you a jackass, "bad day". but you could have responded better, instead of say stuff. its a xp firewall, which i found out might not have a number....so ty. also by the way, if it was as simple as looking it up, why would i even bother you?

Well, it was as simple as looking it up, nes. I mean, even if you Google for it, I'm more than certain you can find all the proper answers to whatever questions you might have about your Windows XP firewall.

this topic has gone confusing but are you talking about the windows firewall that is built in or firewall software you bought? if you bought a firewall then the serial number is probably on the back page of the documentation or behind the CD(s) in the case, usually on a label. For the windows built in firewall, you don't need a serial and it will never ask for one
