What do you want us to do? Feel sorry for you? I agree with Oblivion here.

I'm from England, and my country isn't at war with any one. Even with the bombings in london, this situation has not changed.

Hmmmm... Coast guard eh?

Yeah, Maybe...

But I don't buy it.

I'm with oblivion on this one.

This thread is useless flame bait...

Firstly, this belongs in "Hot Topics". At least I'm pretty sure it does.

Secondly. . .Walrus wrote on Thu, 14 July 2005 10:50I'm from England, and my country isn't at war with any one. Even with the bombings in london, this situation has not changed.And that, my English friend, is yet another reason why I respect you and your fellow countrymen. Your. .

.Prime Minister, is it? He doesn't just go balls-to-the-wall and start throwing bombs and infantry at what is the suspected source. We, on the other hand, are at war with an enemy that doesn't exist.

You heard me. Initially, we started this war to get back at Al-Quita(sp?), if I'm not mistaken.

Then, since we were over there, we figured we'd check up on Mr. Saddam and his area. Well, in the end, we did a lot more damage than we were aiming to do, what with the country going into total and utter chaos once we captured Saddam(and even with a new person in power, I don't think it's eased up too much). But I digress. I don't know the specifications, and therefore, have no right to get into them. I just speak on what I know, unlike some people.

Coast... guard? Nice work! Maybe we'll get lucky and you'll end up like the guy in that terrible game Cold Fear!

Americans fighting the war are better americans than I. Some of us don't choose the military path, and are instead in college or already have full time jobs of our own. For me its both.
