Yeah, thanks. All because they couldn't hold in their hormones, none of this would of happened with ESRB. Yeah, they changed the rating of San Andreas to AO (Adult Only), but that's not what I really care about right now. In fact, I think Rockstar deserved it. Well, if you take a look at this link and read the news of the site:

<http://www.gtasanandreas.net/news/index.php?vo=39>

This situation is going WAY too far.

Quote:After recent statments from the ESRB stating they wish to see modding for all games stopped, some of us decided it would be a good idea to defend ourselves from the whole "modders are evil" myth they are perpetuating. Namely that we somehow made something so shocking and offensive with Hot Coffee that it undermines their whole rating system, even though they've rated at least a half dozen titles as M which are just as (if not more) explicit than anything in San Andreas; modded or otherwise.

This is completely ridiculous. I seriously feel nervous for the game industry, it's like what Glyde said to me earlier:

GlydeThe gaming industry has come under the political spotlight

It's about time ESRB wakes up and notices that game companies have been getting away with a lot of sexual content, but this is being taken in such a dramatic and political way that I can't even stand it. I seriously do fear for the future of the game industry, all of this happened in a matter of days, and it can easily get a whole lot worse.

Unfortunatley, the gaming industry has decayed. People who were once ignorant to gaming now see it, and what they see is the worst side. They don't see the fun kids have with this kind of stuff. So they hate it and want it drowned or hanged for witchcraft.

Politics and gaming have come together. Maybe they'll get a divorce.

This really isn't Rockstars fault. Instead of actually searching for where the Hot Coffe mod came from, the Democrats are attacking the people who had nothing to do with this.

Don't blame Rockstar, blame the douchebag over the internet who made the stupid thing in the first place. Rockstar deserves at least a little support, they're just buckleing under all this political pressure.

Actually, it is Rockstar's fault. Perhaps not 100% their fault, but a large amount of it. It would be different if the mod was 100% user made. However, all this "mod" did was unlock something that had been put in the game by the people who made the game. That is what is causing the trouble.

It wouldn't be a problem if stupid parents wouldn't buy M-rated games for their 10 year olds in the first place. Most game stores won't let anyone under the recommended age of 17 buy them anyway (and let's face it...there's nothing in an AO rated game that a 17 year old is going to be unfamiliar with).

This is yet another case of "let's blame the industry for our own bad parenting." Seriously...nude and sex mods have been around as long as games with characters.

The point is that there is no way to access the "Hot Coffee" content using what came in the package with the game. You HAVE to download a third-party mod to unlock it. It does not matter if the content was there in the first place or not; unless you mod the game it is as good as not there at all.

Besides, all the mod does is reveal a minigame where characters dry-hump each other. You have to download a set of third-party nude skins to take their clothes off.

And I agree with all of this. All I'm saying is that the reason people are up in arms about this, is simply because it was originally programmed into the game. Had someone decided to make a completely 3rd party modification, with new sprites etc. then none of this would have arisen. I doubt you've heard much in the news about the fan made map for Warcraft 3 that allows players to view naked people.

heh, that gives me an idea. We should create a fake site that includes a petition to label all dolls that portray life-like features as an "adult only" toy. Afterall, television, movies and videogames that portray the same thing get a similar rating!

Though to make an addition, perhaps we should send our idea to Mr. Thompson. If video games that blur it are bad, the real toys should be even worse!

A topic about Video Games, and i havent posted in it? Somethins wrong with me. Anyway.

Yeah, the whole Adult Content freak out is gettin fuggin old. It may not have been goin on for long, but still. If im forced to stop playing Halo and Renegade, opting instead for "Counting For Teenagers," im goin on a killing spree. Dont they realize that Violent Video Games actually KEEP us from going out and killing someone? Look at what you can do in Halo, for instance:

1. Grenades. Two types. Frag Grenade, and Sticky Grenade.
2. Bash. Bash bash bash bash bash.
3. Shoot people alot. If this game is known for one thing regarding violence, its this.
4. Rocket Launcher. Enough said.
5. Flamethrower*. Outlawed for a reason to be owned in the USA.
6. Fuel Rod Gun*. Think rapid fire, weaker, Rocket Launcher.
7. Vehicular Manslaughter. You can even back up over their corpses, after youve run them down.
8. You can hump the corpses, by rapidly pressing the "Crouch" button.
9. Tank. Again, enough said.
10. You can hit someone with a Grenade, or something, but you can knock them off the edge of the arena, in certain maps.
11. You can beat up the corpses of your fallen enemies. And blow them up.
12. You can knock a vehicle into someone, onto someone, or over someone.

I submit my long-ish post to the... Er... Readers, and ask: Why are they idiots?

some servers on Call of Duty ban you for the happy hump (also known as 'teabagging'). it's funny to see it done, especially to your own body, but funnier still when you see someone banned for it.

speaking of the hot coffee mod. Rockstar probably removed that from their final release for reasons just like the ones cropping up now. Though, you would think that they would completely remove it from the game, not just find a way to disable it.

When something is cut close to release, it is very rarely fully removed. It is too bad, though, because this very likely put the hurt on a lot of mods that are otherwise unrelated.

Either way, I'm not about to go buy a new copy of the game just to be politically correct about it. I highly doubt anyone else will do that either, just because...well, if dry-humping is something that causes you mental trauma, you shouldn't be playing GTA in the first place. This is another one of those so-called "scandals" that starts out as some obscure money-grubbing moron looking for an easy settlement, which then escalates and makes the national news. Sadly enough, that kind of shit is becoming more and more common as people become more and more easily offended by the dumbest little things.

On that note, you don't need the internet to have a great life, if we're going to pull the "you can live without it" card. But wait...you're choosing to use it, aren't you? Wouldn't you be a bit pissed if someone decided one day that the internet as a whole was inappropriate, and unsuited for your use? Yes, you would be- because someone would be second-guessing you and deciding that they know better than you do about what is and is not appropriate for you. The simple fact is that while you don't have a right to such content, you DO have a right to NOT be told what you can and can't watch or play. That goes under the First Amendment- the right to free speech goes hand in hand with a right to hear that speech. Argument invalidated.

The AO rating is completely undeserved. Even with the so-called "sex scenes"- rather, dry-humping- the content is no worse in GTA:SA than what would be found in your average R-rated movie (and the R-rating of the MPAA is comparable in nearly every way to the M-rating of the ESRB). Hell, in some ways, it's a lot more mild- you never see nudity in out-of-the-box GTA (granted, there are some fairly tiny outfits, but not nudity). Not even with the "hot coffee" mod installed. Most theaters don't bother 15 and 16 year olds about getting into R movies, and I've yet to see any stores other than Walmart (I got carded the other day buying Bourne Supremacy- and I'm 19. I very nearly asked for the manager over the suspicious look the cashier gave me after looking at my ID) and OCCASIONALLY BestBuy bother teens about R-rated purchases.

The bottom line is that some suit doesn't have the right to tell people what is and isn't appropriate. That's the parents' job. The rating change caused stores to pull SA from shelves, which impedes the right of the consumer to purchase the game if they choose to do so. It is, in effect, censoring the title from the wider market, not just from the fairly small percent of consumers who will purchase the game before their 18th birthday. It is an obvious political stomp-out move, not designed so much to "protect" anybody as to try to grab a few more votes from the government-daycare crowd in the next election.

What we REALLY need is to find a way to get average-aged gamers out and voting. I'd bet ANY amount of money that if that were to happen, you would never hear any high-profiles bitching about games again.

Quote:The fact is we dont need Sex and nudity to make a good game, and there IS nudity in GTA, i have seen porn pictures on it when i was at a party.

I have the whole series. I play the whole series regularly. Nowhere in any of the 5 games (soon to be 6) and one expansion is there nudity. No bare tits, no bare genitalia. Nude textures for the game's models DO NOT SHIP WITH THE GAME, NOR ARE THEY OFFERED BY ROCKSTAR AS OFFICIAL CONTENT. THE ONLY WAY TO HAVE NUDITY IN GTA IS TO DOWNLOAD CUSTOM, UNOFFICIAL TEXTURES MADE BY A THIRD PARTY. Even with the "Hot Coffee" content unlocked, there is no nudity- all you get is FULLY CLOTHED models dry-humping each other. The game you allegedly saw at the party you allegedly went to was MODIFIED. As in NOT STOCK. How many times must this be said for it to be hammered into your skull?

Don't believe me? Go and buy the damn game and play through it for yourself. I defy you to find so much as one frame of nudity in the entire game.

Quote:The fact is we dont need Sex and nudity to make a good game

Give that argument up. It doesn't hold water. By your logic, people should only be allowed to have what they absolutely need to survive. That is a fundamentally flawed line of reasoning- if everyone in the gaming community thought that way, we'd still be playing Pong- after all, that was entertaining and it had barely any content at all!

Quote:Just like I have a right at age 15 to buy porn, smoke, drink ect?

Flawed argument: we're talking about a bloody videogame here, not addictive, intoxicating substances. Not the same subject, and you ought to know that if you're old enough to be posting on a message board. Videogames don't give people cancer, they don't destroy your liver, and they certainly won't land you in jail (or dead) for DUI or public drunkenness. You are comparing Apples to Steak- not only are they not the same species, they aren't even in the same kingdom.

But while we're on porn, I've never known a single 15 year old who DIDN'T have a porno mag or two stashed under their mattress. I had a whole damn stack of 'em. There is exactly zero proof that porn has a negative effect on the mental development of teenagers. Nada. Nothing. Zip. Zilch. ZERO. You show me a person who, at age 15, DOESN'T know what penises and vaginas are for (and what they look like, and several dirty nicknames for each), and I'll show you a matching pair of oppressive, overprotective parents. If people in this country had any sense at all, thorough sex ed courses would be taught around the time puberty begins- INFORMATION arms people against corruption, NOT ISOLATION AND IGNORANCE.

Quote:These laws are there to protect us.

Someone's not up on their Bradbury. More government control over citizens' PRIVATE LIVES (which includes how children in a family are raised, what they are exposed to, and so on) is a BAD THING.

Nobody is suggesting that stores start selling M-rated games to 9 year olds- but if you aren't mature enough to deal with the content in such a game by the time you hit your mid-teens, YOU NEVER WILL BE. Teenagers do NOT tend to be as impressionable as younger children; a game like GTA is NOT enough to push them over the proverbial edge and into a life of evil. If that's the case, there are FAR bigger issues that need to be examined in that child's life.

The governemnt IS the people. If they want to say hay your kid cant buy porn untill he is 18 or what ever then that is the will of the people.

porn prevents ignorance? Wow, now thats messed up.

Stores already do sell rated M stuff to kids. I know people who are 10 and play GTA, they shouldnt even know what half that stuff is yet.

Quote:the nudity was on the PS version, there is a picture on the wall of a women sitting with a cock in her. THAT is porn.

I know the image you refer to. It appears in GTA: Vice City, NOT San Andreas, and just a minor point: you see a bare ass. That's all that is visible. Bare asses don't even merit PG-13 ratings. Bare asses are generally accepted as appropriate (if not often discussed or mentioned) content for network television. Hardcore porn, by definition, has to show an erect male penis. For anything to qualify as porn AT ALL, it must show full frontal nudity of either a male or female body(don't ask me why, I don't make the rules). The image in question shows neither, and therefore is not porn. Remember: implied sex does not count AS sex. This is also why the rocking cars and "hot coffee" content do not count as pornographic; they do not show the sexual organs.

Quote:Im 15 and i dont own a porn mag.(im not some sheltered freak)im just a person who doesnt disobey the law.

I applaud you on your restraint. Truly, I do.

That doesn't, however, negate the fact that porn is not something alien or unknown to the teenage population in general. Porn has yet to have a negative effect on its millions of viewers/readers. Around that age is when people generally begin to explore their individual sexuality anyway; images of people screwing aren't going to have any effect except, perhaps, to make a person sexually aroused. Which, if science is to be trusted, is a healthy thing. Of course, it isn't appropriate for younger teens to be screwing each other like bunny rabbits, but a little porn never hurt anyone.

Quote:Im saying why do people want to put sex and gore in games? i can understand some gore but ffs its getting outta hand. Sex...look people that is not something that needs to be on every damn billboard, tv show, game, ect..

Gore is an obvious one- gore is good stress relief. The more violent you can be in a virtual world, the less violent you'll be in real life. The effect is similar to that of a punching bag (i.e. something you can take your anger out on without hurting anybody), but without the bloody knuckles.

Sex...well, as far as the "sex" in GTA goes, like everything else in that series, it is a satire. Nothing about GTA is meant to be serious; everything is a stereotype blown waaaaaaay out of proportion. Like everything else, sex is exaggerated and blown so far out of proportion as to be utterly hilarious when compared to the real world (and yet the game shies away from showing ACTUAL, VISIBLE sex- part of the reason "hot coffee" was excluded from the final release, even though it shows no nudity). Strippers and prostitutes have implants the size of melons, an excess of makeup, etc. Pimps in gaudy purple suits cruise around in classic cars turned into lowriders. The list goes on.

The subtleties of GTA's shameless parodies and satires are lost on people who would use the game to further a political agenda. Think of it as a political cartoon in the newspaper, writ large and interactive. Nothing, and I mean nothing, in that series is meant to be taken at face value.

Quote:The governemnt IS the people. If they want to say hay your kid cant buy porn untill he is 18 or what ever then that is the will of the people.

So we should just bend over and take whatever the government does stright up the ass and say "thank you, sir, may I have another?" That statement COMPLETELY disagrees with everything this country is based on. The government, in case you haven't noticed yet, REPRESENTS the people- but the people have NO SAY in the day-to-day goings on in the government. What the government DOES and what the people WANT it to do are two very different things. I'm guessing you don't follow politics all that closely if you haven't figured that one out yet- that statement has the ring of middle school social studies classes. It would be nice if the government always did what the people wanted- but reality isn't so fantastic.

Quote:porn prevents ignorance? Wow, now thats messed up.

Someone didn't read very carefully. Here, let me direct quote so you don't miss the important bits this time:

MEIf people in this country had any sense at all, thorough sex ed courses would be taught around the time puberty begins- INFORMATION arms people against corruption, NOT ISOLATION AND IGNORANCE.

Sex education courses, not porn, for those of us who can read. SEX ED prevents IGNORANCE by arming people with KNOWLEDGE. I thought that part was fairly clear.

Quote:Stores already do sell rated M stuff to kids. I know people who are 10 and play GTA Wrong. Stores sell M-rated games to adults, who then give it to their kids. If that adult happens to be ignorant as to the content of said M-rated game, it's hardly the fault of the store or the developer. It isn't their job to do that- if an adult walks into the store, buys a game, then turns around and hands it to a minor, there isn't anything they can do about that. No rating change will prevent them from doing that. The only way to completely stop adults from fronting for minors is to completely ban the game in question- and that is a horrible, stupid, bass-ackwards awful solution to ANY problem.

You might as well ban entertainment above the G/E rated level if you want to take it THAT far. If that's what you truly want, have fun in your candy-corn sugar-coated fantasy world...just don't expect everyone else to ever move there.

The picture is of a women sitting with a cock in her. I have seen it and that is porn.

Porn may be healthy but the age at which people have sex is getting lower and lower. If porn was less acessable then there would be less pressure for kids to have sex.

Gore can be ok but there is a point when there is too much, they crossed that line with things like doom 3. as i said in my first quote there is porn in gta.

Im in high school, im majoring in political science, i know what im talking about. The people vote for thier reps based on what thier morals and ideals are. If they make decisions that the people dont like you remove them or have a vote on it.

Sex ed does bull shit. I don't care if people know the name of every part and STD, they are still going to do it at a young age.

Stores do sell rated M games to underage kids. I know lots of people who own these games, are underage and they got it themselves.

its not about banning it, its about makign sure it goes to the right aduiance. When you have people that young playing that shit its not a good thing. Maybe when you ahve kids you will understand...

They blurred the pic so you can't see anything. You can't see anything except a butt. I'm not going to post a google link to the picture for fear of ban. Search it if you want proof.

It's in the Mansion to the left of the desk if you are facing the ocean. You have to do the Studio missions first though.
