iPod Shuffle 512MB: $120
Feature list:
-Plays audio files.
-Can be used to store files.

SanDisk Blue 512MB: $90
Feature list:
-Plays audio files.
-Can be used to store files.
-Has a voice recorder.
-Has an FM radio.
-Has a backlit screen for easier navigation.

Every single iPod, when compared to other brands' players with similar capacity, is more expensive while having either only just as many, if not fewer features. iPods are overpriced and overrated, and that's the end of that bloody story.

Correction, they increase your chances. A friend of mine bought his girl friend a shuffle for her birthday, and he came back the next day one happy man.

I can certainly admit there are things cheaper than Apple products, but it's difficult to want to when Apple stuff just plain WORKS. I bought two Airport Expresses for my house because they just WORK. You plug them in, configure them (which takes about 2 minutes), and they just WORK. I use them for Airtunes... you can go to any computer in my house, load iTunes, and immediately stream music to either one of the Airports. And it just WORKS. I never have to fiddle with them, reboot them, or anything. No funky adapters to play with, no dealing with network issues. It found my network and used it without complaint.

Same with my shuffle. I plug it into USB, start up iTunes, and drag and drop files to it. Or I can have pre-configured playlists or automatically-generating Smart playlists to get the songs I want onto it. Then I go in my car, switch to "Aux" mode on my sound system, plug the headphone jack via headphone-to-RCA convertor cable to my car's RCA inputs, turn it on, press play, and I'm done.

I mean, there's plenty of choice out there but the Apple stuff just works without hassle and that's worth extra bucks to me.

Apple isn't the only brand that just plain WORKS. Creative also WORKS. Everyone I have talked to who has a Creative MP3 player has said it WORKS without any issues whatsoever. We're not saying that iPod is bad quality, we're just saying that it's not the only brand out there that is high quality... there are a lot of other ones that are just as high quality and they're cheaper.

Apple has a strong brand, based on quality and people are willing to pay for that. It's the exact same as Nike or adidas. Many other shoes are just as good but you pay for the brand. Nothing wrong with that .

Thing is, it is overpriced but as long as people buy it, what's the problem with it .

Apple's products are not exactly geared toward the technically smart.

The worst problem that I've had with my MP3 player is the buttons not working. They would just turn the back light on. Which was easily fixable by just removing the battery for a few seconds. Some pictures that I took a while ago of my MP3 player with a webcam.

The problem is that it's annoying how everyone at school will just buy an iPod to show it off, and how nearly everyone thinks that iPod is the best because of the brand name. It IS a good MP3 player, but that isn't my point.
