When you take ambien, then sit in front of the computer when you should be sleeping on your pillow.. the colors on the screen really come alive, and it almost feels like you're looking in to some new 3-d visualisation... me thinks these forums are three-dimensiona! oh, and my keyboard doesn't work too well either..

"this product may impair your ability to drive or operate machinery.." CHECK..

But what about sitting at the computer? That should be on the lable too..

...You use any stuff you should not be using?

No I get your point. I think sometimes it is time for a reboot, and a nice cup of tea.

I noticed something similar while sitting in front of the computer after taking LSD... and it had no warnings at all.

Well, therein lies the point:

You should be sleeping. They are mind altering drugs.

You forgot to say "Mmkay?" afterwards.

I notice the same effect when you don't get sleep for nearly three days.

I don't understand why we need sleep. It's not like our heart is only good for 25 years, and if we don't sleep, we only live that long. Not as if, we need to shut our brains, lungs, or minds down to save some for later. Hopefully, these work until we die.

I don't get it, and the best reason anyone has given me, is to reproduce cells. So, I can't reproduce cells while I'm awake? It's a mystery to me.

I hate being tired though, especially driving a long distance. That's a bad feeling. The idea of cutting groves in the pavement and concrete on the shoulders of the interstate is genius.

Damn, all this chit chat is making me tired.

Sleep is very important. Everything slows down and gets a break. Also sleeping is very good for phycology, imagine a life where there is no monday, tuesday, wednesday....just 1 day, never ending. Birth till death no break. That will screw you up, things that happen to you during the day have to be processed, so you can deal with them better.

A quick word of advice:

Never fly a plane on Vicadin!

Even in a videogame. I had surgery and had to stay in bed for a week once. They gave me Vicadin for pain but failed to warn me if its true power. I took a hit and loaded up Ace Combat 4. I can't remember too much of what happened, but I 'awoke' to the sounds of a frantic air-traffic-control officer screaming at me. I couldn't tell which way was up, and flew right through the tower.

I once had to take Vicadin everyday when I landed on my head by a serious skating accident. that stuff freaking sucks.
