i have just recently bought the ten years edition of command and conquer. it has all the command and conquer titles and is really cool. or so i thought.

one thing i noticed is that whenever i play renegade online it comes with a no cd patch already installed. so single player and multi-player is so much more convinient. this is great! no need to scratch those cd's anymore.

i have renguard, all the core patches. everything is great right? Wrong. i like to play in wol and unrules.com servers. in these servers while playing with m copy of the 10 years edition i am suspected of cheating and am kicked. when i am clearly not cheating.
i have another original copy of renegade that i have installed on my comp with the same files and the same core updates but i have to use the cd. when connectiong to the favorite servers listed above. i can connect just fine.

my question is why does renguard think i am cheating when i am using my brand new edition of ten years edition. and will there be an update to renguard so that i may be able to use my new copy of renegade?

Sometimes, RG gets confused by certain game2.exe's. Replacing your game2.exe with the one JonWil posted in these forums (it's the TFD game2) should fix it.

Right. This problem was addressed the first day the game came out. The "First Decade" version is different for some reason or another.

Just make sure Renguard is installed in the directory for the version of the game you are using. If you try to play the new one, while Renguard is installed in the old directory or vice versa, then Renguard won't recognize it. There is a manual install for Renguard somewhere, if the install program won't l you update with the new location.

What you can do is download the Renegade No-CD Crack from the link below, you might have to register on the website though http://forum.n00bless.com/index.php?download=6

After you download the No-CD Crack, extract the game2 file to the "Renegade" folder.
