Read hareman's post.

It's hard to imagine it's been three years already.

R.I.P. Trey Dornieden. We miss you terribly.

EDIT: PLEASE, for the love of all that is good, DON'T bump the topic posted. I only meant it as a reference to what foenixz said.

I think there should be a post like this stickied. Should include the guy, his story, people he helped, etc. I'm still don't know quite what he did.

TreyD was a huge inspiration to myself, he actually taught me quite about .Net development which inspired me to continue along that path. Now being a Sr. .Net developer, i have only him to thank for that. All the nights and days we spent talking about programming, life, etc... I really looked up to him, and miss talking to him.

With Respect
