So that would pop up when you went to the pct? Looks like it would take longer... Which would mean giving n00bs a better chance to spawn kill.

Arrows could use a new graphic in my opinion. Even though they look to be from the original TD.

that looks... awesome

One question: will the overhead map always be behind the PT icons? As it's kinda hard to see it all like that... I am of course assuming you intend to have an overhead view of the current map once you have completed it, I might be mistaken in thinking that Arrows are from Red Alert 1 and were just something I grabbed because thats what came to hand. Presumably the RenAlert team, the Reborn team, the RA2 mod team and anyone else who uses the sidebar will draw their own arrows for their specific mod.

as for the overhead map, those are just textures I grabbed for testing because they were the first things that came to hand that were a suitable size.

The plan is that mods will put some kind of background there (which might include the gdi/nod/allies/soviets/whatever logo in the blank space at the top.

No plan to have a map anywhere.

Nice work.

You could put the radar in the top like the proper sidebars since when you acces the PT the radar is not displayed.

And for the record, this "RA2 mod team" you talk about is called Apocalypse Rising or ApocRising for short.

REPLY Not true. When you access the Purchase Terminal the radar is not displayed. REPLY

Well, maybe it's a bad idea. Anywho, maybe the logo of each team? or an overhead view of the current map?

i think some of you are slightly missing the point. its not just the fact that it looks like the side bar.... thats probably just a test. Its just showing you whats possible these new pts open up tons of new possibilities ie: separate categories for ships, aircraft, vehicles, infantry, or more beacon slots, or a refill that only refills ammo with a bonus of new looks possible

well thats how i see it

seems fine, but i don't think that we need a sidebar, because the time we spend with that interface is very short.

i think the current design is fine. i hit 6 then 0 to get hotwire/technican, and i do this so fast, and this is priceless to me besides there are really serious bugs that gotta be fixed. i'll tell you those if u ask.

Thats kinda... kewl i guess...

although there is a reason that games moved the controls and the radars to the bottom of the screens.

1. 90% of the action that is going on on the screen takes place in the middle section.
2. moving your eyes slightly downward to look at the bottom of the screen is much easier then moving them to the left, right, or top (try it out, its much easier) this is due to the fact that most of the time your head is slightly tilted forward anyway, and while looking at the middle of the screen, you are in fact looking slightly downward anyway.

In an FPS, sidebars really don't work, and will actually cause eye strain and people complaining that it is too hard to work with.

Its kewl, but i would look at doing a bottom screen version rather then a top screen one. Having the bar at all is RTS like.

also, just noticed, you need to push it all the way to the right, looks odd without proper art, and most likely the original art it releases with is what will be used.

Remember, in APB, you won't neccessarily be staring at a diagram of the building on the wall when making a purchase. You will be able to, for example, stand there staring out the doorway watching a group of enemies coming before deciding which unit is best to get, and you'll be able to check your radar too; plus if you're within sight of a vehicle factory you can watch as the tanks come out and know if everybody's leaving without you, or if you can now build because they're done, or what-have-you. You'll also still be able to see your health.

Less ability to sneak up on people and start attacking them without them knowing, as they face a wall oblivious to the action around them. Plus, more like the RTS :V

If I get my way it will also still allow numbers to be used (with the possible necessity of adding a couple repeat-strokes, but nothing time consuming-- a quick multi-tap of 9 or 0), and in some cases you might end up saving time.

For example, let's say you wanted an ore truck. Right now, you run up to a wall, press E 7 3; that opens the PCT menu, takes you to the vehicle page and then selects ore truck. Instead, you'd run near a subtly marked purchase zone within the building (say, by those blueprints over there) and press E 9 8 instead. Same result, but you had your vision open the whole time and were never clearly making a purchase, so that Spy lurking nearby could neither run out and prepare to steal (he's not sure you're buying) and he couldn't start silently pistoling you (you can see your life still, and can see his blip racing towards you-- and the damage indicators flaring up if he does begin to attack).

Let's say you wanted to purchase a V2 missile launcher. You walk up near the side of the vehicle ramp, and press E 7, and out rolls a V2. That's it, just two keys, instead of E 7 3 like it used to be. Suppose you're playing a later version of APB, where you have a V2 that's available in a variety of color schemes. You're playing North by Northwest, a snowy map. Normally you'll now need to click to (or type to) the vehicle purchase menu, click the tiny yellow arrow to the color you want, and then finalize the purchase-- every time you want a snow-camo V2.

Well, suppose there's a way to select (via the sidebar) your preferred camo in advance, and have it remember for the next time. Now you've saved yourself a keypress and a couple clicks, all while keeping your vision open, radar accessible, and health visible. Win, win, win situation.

Yet another bonus for the sidebar: the redo of the purchase system could allow us to easily blank or remove icons if a requisite building has died, and happiest of all, means we can prevent refill-whoring. No more Tanya sitting against the purchase terminal preventing anything except a lucky headshot from taking her out thanks to constant refilling.

Keyboard input is a necessity. The golden rule with all UI is it should always be fully functional without the need of a mouse.

You'll save a lot of neck and eye strains if you consider migrating it to the bottom-section of the screen. As Dante clearly laid out, it is much more natural for us to view the bottom portions of our screens (as we always are) compared to viewing the right portion of the screen. You won't take as many players out of the game by doing so.

Keyboard keys are there, all options in the sidebar have keys that trigger them.
Refill whoring will be prevented with a limit of how often a player can use refill.

Here is a preview video of the new sidebar as it stands now including the purchase of a stealth tank by pressing the keyboard key for it.

Here is how the sidebar works currently: (or will once I finish a few final things like the "alternate select" buttons)
Some event, whatever the scripters decide is triggered which results in an engine call being called.
This then creates the PT dialog.
When the PT dialog is created, the "alternate select" buttons (if the "alternate select" feature is enabled), up arrows, down arrows, background and refill button have their settings/textures applied.
Note that the sidebar background textures can have alpha transparency (so all that "wasted" space seen in the video will be transparent).
Clicking on one of the up or down arrow buttons will scroll that column. The refill button is always present in position 1 (where you see it in the video).
Pressing the down arrow key or up arrow key will scroll both columns by one icon.
Pressing the 9 or 0 keys will scroll both columns by a whole page (i.e. 3 icons for infantry, 4 icons for vehicles).
Pressing the - or + keys will scroll to the beginning or end of both lists.
Whenever a column is scrolled, any PT button in that column that is highlighted, will be deselected. Also, all icons in that column will be reset to the default alternate (if any other alternate had been selected with the yellow arrow).
Pressing the 1 key will trigger the refill, pressing the 2,3 or 4 keys will trigger the infantry and pressing the 5,6,7 or 8 keys will trigger the vehicles.
Pressing the a,b,c or d keys will trigger the relevant "alternate select" button if the "alternate select" feature has been enabled.

When one of the 8 purchase buttons is clicked, any selected button is deselected and the clicked button is selected.

When a keyboard key is pressed or when a purchase item is double clicked, the relevant item is purchased.

If the "alternate select" feature is disabled, normal alternate purchasing applies (with the yellow arrow). If the "alternate select" feature is enabled, different logic comes into affect.

If the first of the 4 "alternate select" buttons is selected, then the main purchase item is purchased.

If one of the other 3 "alternate select" buttons is selected then the first, second or third alternate is selected (if appropriate). If no matching alternate exists, the main purchase item is purchased.

For the "alternate select" feature, the first button/option will be the default.

The button for the current selection for the "alternate select" feature will be disabled to indicate which option is selected.

The refill feature will feature a hud.ini settable limit to control how often a given player can use the refill. If the player is unable to use the refill, it will appear disabled.

All relevant data is read from the data stored under "purchase settings" and "team purchase settings" in leveledit.

All textures used for the sidebar are customizable through hud.ini keywords.

The existing scripts (such as the expvehfac scripts by WhiteDragon) and any new ones required will be used to manage the sidebar (remove certain vehicles from the vehicle list because the relevant vehicle limit has been reached or restore them after the limit is no longer reached for example).

Also, if the vehicle factory is currently building (I check the value set by the Set_Currently_Building engine call but not the normal renegade value at this time), the vehicle buttons will be disabled.

Oh and just to be 100% clear on this, EVERY button/action on the sidebar WILL have keyboard controls associated with it.
