I heard about this movie ages ago while it was in developement, I think it was a joke website/movie or something and when Samual L jackson heard about it he said "I want to be in that!!"

:S i can't really rememeber

I want to see it as it sounds so stupid, a bit like something that would of been realised in the 80's.... oh no snakes!!! and .. a plane! were all doomed lol

Hollywood original movie thinktank idea creation method #442:

- Roll 1d20 on action movie actor list.
----> Result: Samuel L. Jackson
- Roll 1d20 on setting list.
----> Result: airplane
- Roll 2d20 on plot list.
----> Results: critters
- Roll 1d20 for type of critter.
----> Result: snakes
- Roll 1d6 to decide size of critter.
----> Result: ordinary

[/sarcasm]

This movie looks like it was randomly generated, and will therefore likely not be worth the money.
Recommendation: wait for rental or neglect.

This movie is going to be awesome. Apparently they actually changed the script to include the title of this thread after it became popular on the internet.

Yes, I did see it. I didn't think it was that bad, but I liked the first one better.

To those who think its a stupid name:

Quote:Most films start production with a working title that is eventually changed after the marketing department spends millions of dollars and countless hours conceiving and testing new, usually lamer names. Such was the case with SoaP (as it is known in cheesy Net-shorthand): Snakes on a Plane was originally just one of the temporary titles, and the studio decided to change it to the presumably more marketable Pacific Air Flight 121 after Samuel L. Jackson signed on.

That is, until the actor freaked out and threatened to pull out of the project if the name wasn't changed back. And when Mr. Jackson asks for something, he usually gets it. "That's the only reason I took the job: I read the title," he is quoted as saying in respect to the unusual name. So, the name came back and a modern-day pop-culture folktale was born.

Oh gosh, what this guy has to say about the film makes me resigned beyond belief.

Quote:

And think about how many old films could be re-released to take advantage of the new marketing concept:

“Citizen Kane” would be re-released as “Rich Guy with a Sled Obsession”

“Lawrence of Arabia” would be “Flamboyant Man in the Desert”

“Jaws” would be “Shark in the Water”

“Look Who's Coming to Dinner” would be “Black Guy Dates White Girl”

“Star Wars” would be “Men in Space”

“Top Gun” would be “Guys in Jets”

“The Exorcist” would be “Girl Possessed by the Devil”

“The Shawshank Redemption” would be “Man in Prison”

“The Lord of the Rings” would be “Small People on a Journey”

“Se7en” would be “Cops Searching for a Serial Killer”

“Das Boot” would be “Men in a Submarine”

So, be aware when you go to see “Snakes on a Plane.” You're sending a message to Hollywood and it might change cinema forever.
