Laughing out loud. It sucks when that happens, but really...

You need more seh-cu-rity. It's the only way to win. :/

peace through power doesnt realy work

Nod is more of a cult so saying that is tricking the mind apart from that. No.

crimsons php ownz, liek there is security flauds on this forums ^_^

lllllol, update, i actualy cheaked that link out rofl funny as hell, and planetcnc.com need to update ^^

and i wonder why

Actually, back in the days when GenEdit2k (site) was still alive (around the time when Generals was announced) i hosted one of the Tech Center forums (dont remember if it was TD or RA) along with my mod's forum.

I can remember that my forum got hacked real bad and the Tech Center Moved. Ever since the move, the tech center has been a constant script kiddy victim.

All because of crappy IPB securityholes. That is why i prefer phpBB (even thought its anti-spambot protection sucks).

do i dear put this as a ROFL!

I like IPb more better, phpbb is bland for someone who is a noob like mw with it, Tho with IPB you can do some real cool things with it

A good forum to use is SMF, it's free like phpBB, has a lot of great features and is fairly new so there are few hacks / spambots etc around for it. Also the team behind it are quick to release patches to fix any security bugs from what I have seen.

The homepage for it is <http://www.simplerachines.org/>

I will admit we are still using phpBB at lmsbc, but its simply because switching it over is too much like hard work, and I would have to re-add my forum modifications, but if your starting a new forum I recommend trying it out. It's always been stable when I have tested it locally, and the new ApocRising site is going to be using it.

FUDForum is the most secure forum out there. phpBB is a JOKE in the PHP developers' community. FUDForum is coded by a guy named Ilia Alshanetsky. He is on the PHP team (as in, the people who create and improve the language), AND he wrote a book on PHP security. He always responds to questions on his forum within 24 hours, and if you're reporting a bug, he usually fixes it and provides you a way to get the update immediately.

FUDForum also includes a powerful API which makes it easy to integrate into other sites. (Just look at <http://www.jelly-server.com/nuke/modules.php?name=FUDForums> -- they integrated it into Nuke)

I forgot to mention -- Every other hour, on the hour, when the forum hangs, it's because the database is locked for backups. So if we are hacked, at the worst case scenario we lose less than 2 hours worth of posts. If you remember, back when we were on phpBB, we were hacked and all posts deleted, but my backups saved the day.

whenever i write php programs i alway check every variable that is even remotely editable via the browser for tampering.

if the server is attacked i let the host deal with it.

No problem.

^ That's what happened last time phpBB showed its ugly face 'round here.

Go FUDforum go!
