I love when forum upgrades break stuff. It makes me feel warm and fuzzy inside. I'll fix the header image momentarily, and I'll remove this thread when I do.

You could just run 2 installs, one in an IP-restricted subdirectory and patch that one first?

A staging server for a forum is overkill, but the concept isn't.

I actually was able to recover my CSS but for some reason some things still look like garbage. I need to find an archive somewhere... maybe the wayback machine will have one.

The flags beside the names are pretty cool.

They probably work by looking at your IP or maybe your ISP?

Look next to your name, it will show you your country's flag.

They are most probably IP based yes, ISP based would be the same actually. The other thing they could check for is the accept language the browser sends but that's not as accurate.

No, they're based by IP. There are a couple of companies that keep an extensive and accurate database of IP-to-country records that I had to import for this to work.

Crimson, I'll bet in the first few lines of the "read me" it probably said "make sure you back-up your forum directory before attempting upgrade"..

Has anyone seen ack lately? It's been so damn long since I've felt the presence of an asshole around here.

And I agree, the forum has felt a lot nicer since Johnny boy left...
