I had it long ago but no do. I don't care what format the logo is in: 3DS, MAX, OBJ, W3D, MD3, gMAX, etc. I have converters that will take care of that. I just need the stinkin' logo. If ya have a GDI emblem that be great, too.

Preferably the Tiberian Dawn style, but I'll take what I can get. I know I could build one for myself, but I'm lookin for the cheap and easy way out.

Get a picture of it, apply it to a plane, outline it with the line tool, cap the line, extrude to the depth you need.

Why apply to a plane when you can set it as a viewports background?

Can't remember how it's done, probably somewhere in viewport configuration, but i know it can be done.

Alt+B

There's no reason to put an image on a plane rather than as the background to use as reference, unless you like to do more to accomplish something that is less useful...

I've always used planes, because I never knew you could set a background in the viewport. It doesn't make me any worse of a modeler.
