Since Renegade doesn't make use of scuds in any form, I'm curious where you got your name from...

I think you just answered my question. If you guys are looking for some more people to play those games with, you can hang out with our community on www.tsugaming.com. We have some pretty good Zero Hour players as well.

You should consider changing your abbreviation. SS still hugely refers in people's mind to hitler's Schutzstaffel (<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Schutzstaffel>) especially as there is a guy called ss on cw.cc who is in love with hitler or something.

Doesn't matter now anyway though as these guys just merged with Kod to make:

Yup my clan -(SS)- combined with -KoD- to create [-A-]. (Assassin's Creed).

all sections we had in -SS- is still in -A-

Just for reference:

I believe a scud storm is a small range missile barrage that the allied units created in one of the C&C's sorry, but ive heard that somewhere, and i just thought of GDI and missiles being fired.

Also, i seen it on TV, its war thing, those trucks that look like V3 rocket launchers, can also have Scud missiles equipped, and i know they are russian, because there was a scare of them back in the 80's (not sure on date) maybe someone can look it up for me?

I think people are already pretty aware of what a scud is, the GLA used them extensively in C&C Generals as mobile weapons and the scud storm as their super weapon. And I believe you are referring to V2 rocket launchers - pretty sure they were Russian.

I thought scuds were used in the middle east during the gulf war by saddam, it's pretty old technology nowadays though, hence the association of them with terrorists and less developed countries.

The V2 design was from a teenage boy in germany, i think its a German rocket... probly modified by Russians, highly used by germans in WWII
