I thought this would be a interesting topic to make.

What do you think the youth of today is like?

Around were I live, All they do is smoke weed underage, Very violent (carrying knives around etc) and steal (Houses, shops, cars etc)

Personally I blame all that rap smap with the message "Gotta have money!!!" what results to stealing and selling what they stole, "gotta smoke weed!!" results into underage smoking.. and "Bust a capp in his azz for snitchin!!" what results to violence..

Tho I may sound like a retard to some, Thats how I personally see it.

I was talking to my mum about how kids around here do all this and my mum said "When I was young, If me or any of my brothers did that, we would have got punished badly and grounded and we never even thought of the idea of doing it again."

I think some parents are scared of there children.. So they just let em' do what they feel like, No matter what the damage cost is.

ok what i meant is the old fashioned way, spanking. i remember when i was 8 i came home from school and told my mom its not for me anymore, she was like what are you talking about and i said i quit school. couldnt sit on my ass for a few days but as soon as i could i was back in school this is how i was taught manners and punished, and i would say i turned out pretty good, so thats going to be my method aswell.

now if i was to find out my kid is addicted to cocaine or any other serious drug, i dont think spanking them is the answer. more like giving them the choice, aadac/rehab and not going out for a few months (so i know the addiction is gone) or be disowned and move the fuck out. the only drug i will tolerate (to some extent) in my house is weed nothing else...

Hell, I did.

yet again violence is not needed. in fact, you hit him. he hits you back twice as hard. then storms out and takes drugs again.

I think that fully grown men and woman hitting children is wrong, Its just cowerdis. weather you think its deserved is up to you, but i think its just a way of dictating. im not saying that if/when i have children i wont puinsh them, but there are much better ways than that. even shouting will get you no where. in school i get shouted at alot, just to me it just sounds like a blur.

roms way does work, kind of. just that its cruel.

There are several reasons the youth of today is fucked up.

1) Welfare. If a woman can get knocked up and get more and more government money for each kid she pops out, she'll do it if she's too stupid to make money any other way and if she's fallen into the myth that her only value in this world is measured by how many males want to shove their penises inside her. The main downside to this is that the children grow up without a father because the mother doesn't need his income to survive. His child support (if he pays it) and government money is enough so that she doesn't have to hold a real job.

2) Rap music. I would think this was bullshit if I didn't see it firsthand. I watched that music transform my sister. She and I were raised very similarly and I didn't listen to that crap. That music glorifies and encourages sexual promiscuity and substance abuse and she definitely started participating in those things while I didn't.

3) Fear of spanking. I know it sucked to get spanked as a kid, but when children are very young, the pain consequence is all that really works. Spankings should be restricted to butts where the body is designed to withstand such an injury. Grounding your child to their room where they have a TV and video games isn't really a punishment.

4) Parents wanting to be friends. I think most parents these days don't seem to realize that their job is to be a PARENT, not a friend. Friendship with your children shouldn't happen until after they are grown up and moved out. Your job is to raise them to be a contributing member of society, not a worthless drain on it. It's downright CHILD ABUSE when parents give in to their kids' whining and teach them that if they cry and whine and beg, they'll get what they want. How does that help them later in life? They need to learn that if they want something, they need to EARN it. Every single day is a learning experience for a child and every experience shapes how they'll deal with situations as an adult.

The only thing that I have to disagree with you Crimson, at least in part, is the idea of not being a friend.

It's fine to be a friend, however Parents need to know when the line should be drawn between when the kid requires a friend and when the kid requires a parent.

That's how my parents treated me, and it's worked quite well. Perhaps my parent got lucky on finding the right balance, but they were able to decipher quite well as to when I needed a friend and when I needed the belt.

see thats exactly my point most of the people i know that are respectful and well mannered have at some point been physically taught manners by their parents. so whats so bad with spanking your child if its well deserved, i see nothing wrong with it. and i mean sure in north america your child can call the child protection services and report you, but in the end if your child keeps misbehaving and reporting you he/she will be taken away. personally i think for a child that would be even worse so no matter what if your child doesnt get the point of why they are being spanked and will get a foster home then perhaps this is the best for them... since in that case it is safe to assume you were failing at being a parent or your child just would not abide by your rules and no compromise could be reached

* 85% of all youths sitting in prisons grew up in a fatherless home.

[Fulton County Georgia Jail Populations and Texas Dept. of Corrections, 1992]

* Nearly 2 of every 5 children in America do not live with their fathers.

[US News and World Report, February 27, 1995, p.39]

http://blogs.usatoday.com/oped/2006/07/parents_share_b.html

Quote: Today, about 24 million American children go to bed each night in a home lacking a father. This is unacceptable and creates a climate that leaves children without the love and affirmation they need — too often leading to reckless and dangerous behavior. In fact, 70% of juvenile murderers grew up in father-absent homes.

To chalk up this recent spike in juvenile crime to a lack of government money is a tired and increasingly meritless argument.

Kids need both parents for their best chance to avoid crime.

Yes, I agree. Growing up without a father kinda ties into all of these. A father is traditionally the tougher disciplinarian and without tough discipline, the child doesn't realize the penalties of when they do wrong. I did mention the whole fatherless aspect in #1. There are other reasons besides welfare that children can go without fathers, of course, and they are also a factor.

I agree with 2 and 4, and I think that 3 really falls into 4 in a way.

Number 1 actually occurs most in the black community where the number of marriagable males, period, is relatively small (due to imprisonment, murder, etc.). Welfare doesn't necessarily have much to do with it, but poverty itself does.
