I'll believe that the world is continuing to warm up in 30 years if it's still an 'issue'. Until then, I won't believe it. I see too much evidence of the earth shifting it's climate from cold to warm. This is nothing new. It's even been documented as far back as Mesopotamia.

However, that doesn't mean I won't support new and better alternatives to fossil fuels and lower emissions because pollution is a serious issue as is evident in California.

The United States isn't the only nation to produce chemicals that reduces ozone and is also amongst the most aggressive nations to try and combat "Global Climate Change" (cuz its more than just temperature warming). I can appreciate articles on the subject matter, and even calling out any improper government actions. But this article and discussion seems a bit biased in my opinion.

Putting everything even remotely debateable ("Does global warming actually exist?", "If so, is it caused by human interference?", "Is mending our ways for the sake of global warming worth the economic cost?", etc) aside, I pose this question:

"Would taking steps like getting a high MPG car or finding alternate fuel sources have any bad effect on anything at all? Ever?"

The answer is no. While global warming may or may not exist, may or may not be a problem, certainly buying that fancy new Hybrid doesn't do anybody any harm. If not for the environment, do it just to be a better person.

I don't believe in global warming.

I will only believe it if I am provided with provided charts that show average temperature in each year increasing. But yesterday, it was 9* F and last year the lowest was like 20* F (in ny) so I don't really know, and I just have my beliefs in that opinion of mine that it does not exist.

lol, well ... it DOES exist. Sea levels are rising because polar ice is melting ... because ozone levels are low in some areas ... because of man. Everything from an increase in climate temperature over the last few hundred years to increased hurricane activity ... to sea levels rising. It is a major issue, no doubt. And it is very real.

its not ozone, ozone just blocks ultraviolet rays. its the infra-red rays we should worry about and nothing blocks them.

global warming happens when greenhouse gasses are released into into the atmospere. some of these gasses also destroy the ozone layer.

People will continue to use environmentally unfriendly technology because it is cheaper. If there was a technology that was cheaper and more environmentally safe, people would use it. Until that happens, "Global Warming" and pollution are still going to be a problem. People just don't want to drop a few bucks more to fix it.

Plus, if we used non-polluting equipment, it will actually be getting hotter at the point we currently are in..

Pollution gets caught in the clouds, and etc. It blocks radiation produced from the sun, actually it makes the earth cooler, but if we continue like this, the heat will be getting worse, and global dimming won't have a great effect anymore.

greenhouse gasses don't block the suns radiation. they block the heat escaping from earth. they still let the radiation in. even if we [b]did[b] use non-polluting equipment we would still go through an ice age. greenhouse gasses just speed up the process. remeber, the earth itself spits out much more than we do. through volcanoes, vents. even some undersea earthquakes or tremurs can release laterally tons of methane.

I'll bring up this argument again, then.

Earth alone polluting the air: Global warming occurs in 10,000 years. (Made up number, just used for effect)

Earth PLUS Humans polluting the air: Global warming occurs in 1,000 years (again, a made up number used for effect)

Simply because "the earth does it too" does not mean we aren't accelerating the process.

The earth is constantly changing in temperature. The earth just went through and ice age, i don't think there is much that we as humans can do to stop this. It's part of nature. A belching volcano will put out more chemicals in the ozone than humans ever will... So go buy that 10-15mpg suv/truck and don't feel guilty!

But as a side fact, when Mt Saint Helles went off it put more greenhouse gasses into the atmosphere, then man kind have in our entire existence.

Here's my small take on global warming.

I personally don't put much credence in global warming, since there's not been much hardcore scientific data directly linking man with an increase in temperature.

But that's besides the point. I don't really mind people who go and blab about global warming and how we're all gonna die. What I do mind is when people blame it on the U.S. gov't. It's like "omg teh US is causing teh glober warmin thing cuz they attacked iraq guyz."

Now if global warming is a reality, I'll be the first one to say the U.S. had A part in it, since the age of industry in the 20's and such, but you can't just point fingers at the U.S.

For example, if you've studied anything about Mexico City you'd know that breathing the air is equivalent to smoking a few cigarettes.

I forget who said it (too lazy to look) but the U.S. is also taking a major part in trying to reduce global warming.

According to this UK Study, CO2 does not "cause" warming, it is an "effect" of warming. CO2 increases lag behind warming, not the other way around.. and they state that Al Gore knew this, he just didn't bother to point it out..

Why would he? it would sort of destroy his theory on Man-Made Global Warming.

Some of you dont even understand what global warming is. For a start the ozone layer has very little to do with global warming, they are only related through 2 things. And also, it has nothing to do with the amount of 'infrared',or correctly said shortwave radiation that the earth receives from the sun. Its the long wave radiation that is re-emitted by the earth, and retained by earths 'greenhouse effect'.

Maybe if you read below.

Quote:

WASHINGTON (CP) - While U.S. senators talked about new measures on global warming, advocacy groups revealed Tuesday top officials put pressure on climate scientists over the last five years to downplay the threat.

There is plenty of scientific data linking man with global warming. There is also plenty of scientific data to suggest otherwise.

My stance on global warming is that theres a good chance we (humans) have cause the accelrated warming of earth and we SHOULD go about trying to sort it out.

Whats the best that could happen?

Save countless lives, preserve alot of the animal species that will die out etc..

Whats the worst if we do something and global warming doesnt excist at all?

Well in about 10/20 years we can all laugh at how silly we all were. Just like at the millenium bug.
