What are you trying to say? Did your dad pass away?

I don't know how I should respond.

I can either respond negatively and be called an insensitive prick, I can respond sympathetically and fall into a trap, or I can just leave it at that.

I think this is someone who is trying to get their relative to return to their collective father.

The last bit 'me dad' I think is scottish slang meant to say 'my dad' so put it that way and the entire post makes more sense.

I could be wrong, though.

The title says "Wish You Well".

Teenagers cringe when told that their parents love them. Cam, is always looking at the forums and on IRC. What better way to express my feelings is there, especially when he still gets the unexpected kiss and cuddle?

This way he reads it too.

For those that read the topic, you have my sincerest thanks.

45 minutes to go, until he is in hospital.

ps. excuse my spelling, typing whilst drunk, was the reason for the grammar mistakes. Too many thoughts at the same time and not enough fingers to type with.

"Return back to me" followed by Dad is what the statement should say.

As in Come back to me Cam!! from Dad

He needs the bone cut away from his right ear followed soon by an operation on his left ear.

So many ops for someone so young. 6 times in hospital and 4 ops.

They say "a little knowledge is dangerous", IMHO it frightens the shit out of me, knowing about life support during an OP, when machines are keeping you alive and not your own heart, as many believe.

Fingers crossed as Cam is being operated on as I type. more news in 3 hours.

4 1/2 hours in surgery for what was supposed to be a 2 hour surgery. He was sleeping last night when I seen him but at least he still with is.

General anaesthetic is more dangerous than we all think. The thought of someone not making it make back to our world is what terrifies me. Oh I know that the chance is slim but it does happen.

I will have an update from the hospital in an hour. Hopefully this means that the sound from Renegade will be turned down as Cam plays. For a while I could hear the game from his headset in my room.
