Images: When posting images in the forum, try to keep their size below 1024*768 pixels. This is to avoid screen stretching, as well as loading several large images each time you try to read a thread. Use thumbnails or links if possible.

And that is why I brought it up. Just because you people don't want me to be a moderator doesn't mean I wont use the rules for my argument.

That being said I'll be on my way, there is really no point to this hassle for either of us.

ATi likes to make card's with better performance for the price. X1950XT is $180 (last time I looked) and the 7900GS is a bit above that and it does not preform as well and lacks SM3 AA+HDR.

8 Series has some fucked up drivers... my 8600GT is proof of this.

Simple games and demo's of DX10 stuff give me random errors

Wish I kept my X1950XT, it preformed better and cost the same and did not BSOD vista all the time :/

So saying ATi is better then nvidia or nvidia is better then ATi is like saying left is better then right. AMD owns ATi now anyway, and AMD is awesome.

1. You could have replace the originals on your website with ones within the parameters.
2. Yes you can, it's called PHP. Have your server generate them for you. RenHelp uses it for the models section because I don't feel like messing with it either.

According to my Custom PC magazine, the current topline of ATi, the Radeon HD 2900XT isn't anywhere near as good as the 8800 Ultra.
I always buy nVidia, mainly because I've never had any major problems with them and also because they seem to have less confusing names.

Also, it really isn't difficult to make thumbnails. You can even get programs that batch-produce them from a folder of images for you. (I should think there are plugins for Photoshop, Fireworks, etc. that do this)

The ATI vs Nvidia argument is similar to the Intel vs AMD argument, for a while it was AMD, then Intel bought out Core 2 Duos and round it went. It'll be one then the other, for as long as both companies are around.

Stop arguing, you're wasting time.

It's an opinion. You cannot directly put 2 processors (different makes) together and say one is better.

Some processors have more math functions, some people don't think that's better. Some processors (AMD) have more registers, does that make it better? Intel are now releasing dual core processors, does that make them better than an AMD processors? You can't say, because they are too different from each other. Dual core doesn't mean more power, it just means it can handle more threads than a single core processor. If a processor is single core, it can have a faster clock, have a bigger cache, have more registers. Put 2 of them in one package then it is halved. However, if you can use both cores at the same time then you have a winner. One thread doesn't have to wait as long to be processed.

Everyone is entitled to an opinion but when they are telling someone to stop arguing i, (in my opinion are not entitled to one).

This almost is the same for graphics cards.
