In a little under 4 hours from now, I will be reporting to an oral surgeon to have all 4 of my wisdom teeth removed. I have been putting this off for a while but the pain is getting unbearable, so it has to be done. Two of the teeth have cavities, which is apparently rather common since they are partially erupted and difficult to reach with my toothbrush.

My brother went to this same surgeon to have his removed a couple years ago, and he was given whatever sedative makes you completely not remember the procedure at all, so I hope to get the same. My sister had hers done with laughing gas and she remembers the doctor pulling and prying her teeth but at the time she didn't care. I don't want to remember it.

Also, my grandma went to the emergency room barely responding with a high temperature last night. I haven't heard exactly what caused it, but she is apparently improving in the CVICU (Cardiovascular Intensive Care Unit) - please send your best wishes her way and your curses and epithets to /dev/null.

They did mine two by two. They first told me the two left ones were still ok, three weeks later they also had to pull them out. Reason why: you can only do 2 at a time in a doctor's office, if you do 4 at a time it needs to be done in the hospital. The doctor makes more money when doing it in his office than in the hospital.

I suffered twice + staid conscious twice while it was being done because the doctor wanted to earn more money.

All in all it'll take you about 1,5-2 weeks before it's almost completely healed. It hurts but it's not the end of the world.

i had my wisdom teeth pulled a few years back, the procedure itself isnt all that painfull. i got the same thing that your brother did and i dont really remember much of it. only thing is you will be tasting blood for the next 2 weeks and if you do smoke... you will have to quit for atleast a week unless you want gum disease. otherwise its not that bad... oh and ofcourse get some tylenol 3s for when you come off the sedation.

oh and im really sorry to hear about your grandma hope she gets better!

after reading gostows post (which he made while i was typing mine) dont do 2 at a time, do all 4 and get it over with lol trust me on this

As far as I know, I'm getting all 4 done. I'm allergic to codeine so I'm not sure which pain meds I will get (I avoid vicodin because I may be allergic to it as well)... we'll see. I know it's going to be uncomfortable for a while but I've been in pain from one of them that's gotten really bad for the last few weeks so at least it will be over soon.

I don't smoke, so I don't have to worry about that.

My grandma had a good night and is apparently on morphine for pain.

Good luck. And best wishes to your grandma too.

I've had teeth out and imo it didn't hurt that bad, until the anesthetic wore off. My mouth was like "WTF where have john and bill gone?!?!?! AARRRRRRGH WTF I WANT THEM BACK!" in a metaphoric context ofcourse

For me the needle didn't hurt that much going to the outside of the gum but the ones on the roof of my mouth hurt somewhat.

I've never had any wisdom teeth pulled, but I did get two bicuspid removed without any anesthetics or pain reliever, and it didn't hurt at all. I guess I could say it had an irritating feeling, rather. Although, I greatly enjoyed all the Vicodin given to me afterward. I'm sure you'll be fine.

I had my teeth "capped" as a child and I have never had a single cavity. Hell after that procedure I haven't even been to the dentist (Happened after my last baby tooth came out, so that's near 15 years of healthy teeth). Whatever the cost I will give it to my children because it sure is good for the chompers.

Your situation sounds really bad though it but has to be done. Pity has been granted.

I just got back from having this shit done. It was cool... I remember getting in the chair and them injecting the anesthetic, then I remember everything getting all fuzzy about 3 seconds later. Then I remember walking to the recovery room but I don't remember getting out of the chair. Apparently I had to be given specific instructions for each leg to get out. LOL

Now I'm in pain, waiting for my vicodin to kick in. It's been about 5 minutes now and I feel fine so I guess I'm not allergic to it. I know I'm allergic to codeine, though.

I think bed awaits... gotta sleep through the worst of this.

Well, I was rather nervous. I haven't gone with anesthetic before (well, I had eye surgery when I was 13 months old to correct a lazy eye but I don't remember it)... also my grandma is 69 years old and diabetic, but she's the matriarch of our family and I think she keeps us all together. I'm named after her (which makes it weird to ask for her room at the hospital since we have the same first and last name) but I can only aspire to be like her. My aunt takes insanely good care of her -- I doubt there are too many 69 year old diabetics who can still walk unassisted and haven't lost any limbs due to poor circulation.

So, I don't think it was a lot of fuss about nothing, even though I'm sure you guys weren't entirely serious.

Also, Vicodin for teh win. I have four huge holes in my mouth and no pain.

Yeah, be very careful of how and what you eat for the next 1-2 weeks. Avoid eating anything that can break into small particles, and make sure you gently rinse anything out if anything gets stuck. When I had my wisdom teeth removed during winter break, the dentist told me I should try gently swishing some warm saltwater around my mouth after the first 48 hours had passed. I think it may help the pulpy stuff in there regenerate and harden a little faster. I was lucky, and I only had to take about 2 days' worth of hydrocodone (generic vicodin). If you were given an antibiotic as well, you MUST keep taking it until you run out. I hope you're as fortunate as I was in the pain department. I wish both you and your grandmother lots of luck.

My mom, sister, and aunt are all nurses, so I definitely understand the importance of taking all my antibiotics. The hydrocodone is doing its job because there is no way I should be pain-free with 4 huge fucking holes in my mouth, but I am. How long did you keep bleeding? I put gauze in at 9pm which was about 7 hours after my procedure and when I woke up at 1:30am, it was all bloody. I just put my last gauze in, so we'll see how it goes. The injection site in my arm clotted just fine.

My brother has a little tool that looks like a syringe but you use it with water to flush out the holes if something gets in them.

Thankfully, I work from home, so I only had to miss yesterday. I don't see any reason that I will have to miss work in the morning... I feel perfectly lucid and the pain is mostly gone.

I have pretty detailed aftercare instructions, and I was prescribed 16 vicodin with a refill, so I should be good to go. Now I just have to focus on my grandma and making sure she gets out of there soon.

Thanks for the feedback and advice.

I forget exactly how long I kept bleeding. I do remember that I didn't change out the gauze as often as I was supposed to, but it didn't make a huge difference in the end. As long as I was careful to put only slight biting pressure on the gauze pads, but not an excessive amount, the wounds wouldn't bleed or reopen too often, though it did happen at least twice. You don't have too much control while you're sleeping, though, so just carefully position the gauze so you won't involuntarily cause it to rub the area the wrong way. I think I had the gauze at least through the second day, and possibly the third, and the amount of blood decreased near the end. The structure of the pulp in the holes will change and start to build itself up slightly by then, so you can use that as an indicator of progress.

What's weird is that I wasn't given that tool (plastic pipette or something?) to rinse the holes, so I had to carefully swish stuff out. My mom remembered having a tool back when she had her wisdom teeth removed. Go figure. Also, instead of laughing gas or a knockout drug, I just got a whole bunch of novocaine shots. Fortunately, this guy really knew what he was doing, and only the few necessary injections in my pallette hurt (quite severely, but it was unavoidable).

Anyway, as long as you keep taking your hydrocodone on schedule, you shouldn't have any aches or other pains strong enough to be debilitating. If the dentist did a good enough job, you might not even need the entire first bottle. Since you won't need those extras, you can just mail them to Dr. House

I most definitely did NOT want to be awake for the procedure. Period. My sister did it on laughing gas and apparently the surgeon was putting his foot on the chair to brace himself to pull her teeth and she didn't even care. It might have been an interesting memory, but no... I did get some Valium, too... which made me very humorous and laughing.

My swelling is already down, but I have been sleeping for most of the time since the procedure. I have to work in 6 hours, so even though I'm pretty well awake and have just had something like 10 hours of sleep, I should take another nap before work time.

Diabetes suck

I know all about it, since I got it too (type 1 though). You can live with it pretty well, but it is annoying, and type 2 is, from what I heard, worse as in the overweight that mostly goes with it also has a bad influence on the limbs etc.

About the dentist:

Teeth removal is the suckage, I had to get 4 teeth removed, and that hurts, afterwards in particular Also, the 4 holes left are weird and annoying

The bleeding seems to have mostly stopped, and I'm flying without gauze. It did take like 12 hours. I'm doped up on Vicodin which is cool because it doesn't make you high if there's actual pain to stop. It doesn't seem to be having much effect on my caffeine headache since I haven't been able to drink soda for the last day and a half.

I just ate a yogurt which is the first thing I've eaten since Monday evening. I think I need to go make up a box of Jello too.

I think I stopped bleeding almost immediately after.

There was no blood after the waiting period before I could remove the gauze, which means the little clean-up they did before moving me out of the room was enough.

And then there was my brother... who I don't think could stop bleeding for a long while...

I remember I had a root canal and the only thing they did was inject the nerve they were pulling out with something that made it numb about halfway through the procedure. =x I don't think it was too painful though.

I've had 3 teeth pulled, 2 of them permanent, so my dentist said that I would only have to get 2 of my wisdom teeth removed. The strange thing is that 2 of them are almost all the way in, and I have no idea where the other 2 are.

House FTW.

On Topic-

I had a root canal three weeks ago, I had gotten punched in the mouth, the tooth ended up cracking right in half.
(Which, at the time, didnt know, I thought it was just lose from the punch)

So there it is, hanging, and im having a REALLY hard time eating ANYTHING.
I go to dentist- Freeze up- (most painful part) then he pulled, which took two seconds, then did a root canal with a screw,
It felt kinda cool actually.

I'm such a good little patient
I keep my eyes closed throughout the entire thing, Makes you less nervous.

Yea i had almost the exact same procedure as you did Crimson, in my case my bottom right wisdom tooth was at the point where i almost had an abscess tooth, but i had gotten to the dentist just in time before any major infection started. I was given a bunch of antibiotics to take and i had to wait nearly a week before they could even operate which made my pains worse as it went. I had to get all 4 wisdom teeth out, and i still need to get a "bunch" of root canals, but i have had more pain dealing with the single tooth then i think ive ever had with my mouth, so im quite fine with the pain. I didn't really feel anything other then a poke in my arm then i awoke and took some T3 and slept. Was hard to sleep the first few days , but afterwords i didnt have to take any pain killers.

The only thing for me is that my sockets have taken a really long time to heal, not painful but just annoying since i still chew with my front teeth to avoid getting crap in the sockets.
Avoiding getting wisdom teeth taken out is probably the worst thing you can do lol, i had mine start growing in around 5 years ago and i had pain somewhat but was too scared to go in to get them removed. Longer you wait the longer the healing process will take.

Yeah, I'm 27 so I waited a bit too long. I hate dental work and I try to avoid it whenever possible. :\ I've had one root canal and I have a crown on another molar that didn't need one. I think I have one small cavity left somewhere else, then my mouth will be back in prime condition. But for some reason, I found out when I tried to get my XRays that my dentist's office is closed down and no forwarding information is available. It was a group office with something like 4-5 dentists so I don't know wtf happened. Now I have to find a new one.
