I don't know if you guys like the XGAMES or not, but I'm a HUGE fan. This guy fell from 40 + feet and landed. It's too hard to explain- just watch the video.

If you watch where on the ramp he fell that explains why he walked away. I still don't get how he managed to lose his shoes. Maybe if he tied his fucking shoe lases like a big boy he could stay on his board.

Edit: Here you can see his helmet explode.

That's the reason you don't tie your lases tightly, In case your shoes get caught and brake your ankle.

I used to skate, and quite a lot too. If you knew one thing about skating its that most skaters do not tie their shoes. You can skate a lot better when your shoes are "loose". Its hard to explain, so you'd have to grab a board and try it yourself.

I have never ridden a skateboard before but I do have to say that skater's shoes are the way to go. I got a pair once and I kept buying the pair over and over for nearly 10 years. They are just so loose and comfortable...god I miss those shoes..Pfft, stuck with some knee-kay white things now.

I refuse to purchase anything other than a skating shoe. They last a very long time, are some of the most comfortable shoes I have ever worn, and I'll need them for skating whenever I decide to grab my board again.

HOLY crap, they started making them again. They are not very fancy or expensive but if ever there was a shoe made for me this is it:

Even the image says 047036_beauty.gif

I never owned skateboarding shoes. I stick with the good ol' tennis shoe. I skateboarded for about a year, but what I was really into was inline, which they used to show in the XGAMES but they don't anymore. I remember watching somebody try the triple backflip on their skates. I also remember the two asian brothers that were always the best.

I think massive shoes just look retarded so I tend to go for the less chunky canvas shoes. I am currently walking round in a pair of Duffs since my old Vans have died a death.
