Looking on the basic stats it will be fine for renegade but never buy a motherboard with the on-board video in mind. Just plan on buying a new card.

You will never get to play BioShock with a 6150 on board

Probably not on highest settings but it will definitely run it. One of the biggest problems with the 6150 is that its running off shared memory (most of the time) so its pulling from your RAM.

Pretty much any of these will do for now:

<http://www.newegg.com/Product/ProductList.aspx?Submit=ENE&N=1305520548+1068310557+106790717&name=GeForce+7+series>

If your on vista you should probably get a Dx10 card. Some people prefer to get a $400 video card, like a 8800 but I just get something that will do the job without a 8800 price tag.

From the looks of things, you are looking at buying a laptop. When buying a laptop it is important to go with a good video card now when planning to game, rather than later. (You will pay immensely) Go with one of the Nvidia Go Series, something 7800+ would be good. Remember, this will up the cost of your laptop, buy if you plan to use it for gaming, there is not much of a choice.

Oh hell (didnt notice the "go"), if your buying a laptop then yes do as Shadowfalls says. I thought you were putting together a desktop computer. If your planning on gaming, desktop is the way to go. Laptops cost 2-4x as much and cant be upgraded afterwards. (for the most part)

On my HP Dv9000t I have a GeForce Go 7600 512mb card and its holding its own.

The ones he mentioned are for a desktop. As you were not originally clear on what you wanted and not everyone can tell from what you mentioned, he didn't know.

You can't just put a new video card into a laptop, you need to choose it ahead of time with this.

A Geforce Go 7600 should even do the job pretty well for you.

First of all, if you are browsing for computer parts, use newegg.com

Second, that is a video card for a desktop computer, you aren't going to find any for laptops.

When you buy the laptop you need to preconfigure it with the video card you want. That is the issues with laptops, they have a far more limited upgrade capability than desktops.

Yeah Circuit City kind of sucks when it comes to gaming laptops.
Your desktop kind of needs to put out to pasture too Highly good chance that any laptop with a Core 2 Duo or Turion with one of those two integrated videos would perform better.

I am sure it comes with Vista though, doesn't help since it is a resource hog.

For the price of a laptop you can get a bitch'in desktop computer. I wouldn't suggest that you build one with your current level of knowledge about computers so look at pre-built ones. As that goes I haven't bought a pre-built in a long time but I would guess that newegg is good for that too.

My laptop cost $2,600 but for a grand less you can get something like this:

<http://www.newegg.com/Product/Product.aspx?Item=N82E16883227017>

I couldn't personally vouch for the i-buy brand but you can see what you can get for half the price of a laptop.

Yup, as mentioned though, gaming laptops are going to cost alot more. Unless you need to game on the go, it would probably be more beneficial to get a basic laptop for portable use and put together a desktop to game with.

Dell has a current deal for $609 you can get a Core 2 Quad computer with 2GB of Ram and a 80GB hard drive. All you need to do is buy a better video card for it and you are good. Comes with no monitor though for that price.

I don't think you are talking about your fps. That is frames per second, do you mean the amount of memory it can use? If that is what you mean, remember it uses your system memory for that. Having it use more isn't going to improve your gaming performance on that thing.

Since yours is integrated, the higher you have it set to, the more system memory it uses just for itself. That means there is less for your computer to use, which means less the game can use. Since you are using Vista and the requirements for that alone is 512mb of Ram, if you use up too much, you will have some issues.

Your CPU needs memory to read/write to to run anything, your video card does the same. A high-graphics video game will require a lot of memory to run. The CPU has your system RAM and your video card has its own memory to work with the graphics. In your case the Video and CPU are using the same memory and a the video can slow your game to a halt because your CPU doesn't have enough ram to do the job properly and visa versa.

If you mean add more memory, you have to first determine the type you need, then you need to buy it and be able to know how to install it. Easy task for me, for someone who seems to know little such as yourself, probably not so easy.

I believe everyone who has seen Oceans 12 should get one free punch at George Clooney's face.

You're most probably right there. :x

Ever think maybe you're the moron who wants to return something 2 months outside of the return policy and say "I never opened it why can't I retun it." Then you complain and yell and whine and say "I'm never going to shop here again!" and you're back to weeks later.

I never understood how stupid people could be until I started working there. I mean, this forum gave me a good idea, but really.

Why are you guys giving him hell for where he bought it?

As long as he's happy with it, what's the problem?

Actually they are the people who takes returns on FAULTY items AND charges you a return fee. (WTF?) Maybe it's only in Ottawa.

Items that have faults not caused by the user and are within the return policy do not have a restocking fee. If they are charging you call 1-888-BestBuy or its Canadian equivalent, I can't say what they are doing is wrong because I don't know Canadian laws enough to say what they are doing is absolutley wrong and I don't know your situation. If they are charging you the restocking fee, you fucked up somehow.

Oh and using the excuse "IT'S TO SLOW" for a computer is unacceptable, the salesperson probably tried to tell you it would be slow and you chose to ignore them.
