Very interesting. Assuming it's real, nice find.

And I can play them on my computer!
Yay for emulators.

That cartridge sticking out the front might impede playability a bit. I suppose it keeps sunlight off the screen though.

And I on my PSP!

I can also play Legend of Zelda: OOT on my PSP. TOp that?1!

Yes, thank god for emulators.

Sure, you did.

I also built a machine that hypnotizes EA employees into giving you the source code for Renegade, but someone stole it before I could use it or post any pictures.

I have the original ps1 LCD screen's plastic casing disassembled still, if you want, i could take a picture of it proving I used it for a portable n64, the fact I dont have legend of zelda OOT anymore but still have the box kinda adds to it was in the n64 when stolen, and the fact I have my dismembered n64 case kinda proves i took it apart and made it into something....

EDIT:

and this link with helpful images of wiring and ben's email kinda gives i did something too.....except mine didnt have a nice case, I just used a plastic case i bought, it looked ugly, but it works...cause ben has a plastic cutting machine which also engaves, and everyday people dont...so i couldnt really use anything fancy...

It's NES though.....who really plays those games? It's best to look back with fond memories and not be introduced to how terrible it really was.

Duck Hunt was pretty awesome. I still love to play it when I get the chance.

However, my favorite is still the Super Nintendo.

Hell yeah. Startropics II: Zoda's Revenge was even better imo. My favorite game for the NES has to be Super Mario Bros. 3, though. I still have the old original model NES here, and it works
