LOL!

Quote:Lawmaker shows naked woman during school lecture

NORWALK, Ohio (AP) -- A state legislator surprised a high school class when the computer he was using projected a photo of a nude woman during a lecture on how a bill becomes a law.

State Rep. Matthew Barrett was giving a civics lesson Tuesday when he inserted a data memory stick into the school computer and the projected image of a topless woman appeared instead of the graphics presentation he had downloaded.

Police interviewed Barrett and school officials and seized the data memory stick and the computer to determine where the image came from, a state highway patrol spokesman said.

Barrett said there were a few snickers from the approximately 20 students in the senior government class at Norwalk High School when the image appeared. He said he immediately pulled the memory stick out of the computer.

The legislator said he finished his lecture using printouts and then met with the school's principal and technology staff, who examined the stick. He said the school's technology director determined the stick had a directory of nude images in addition to Barrett's presentation on civics lessons.

"I have no idea where these came from," the Democrat said.

Barrett said the data memory stick was a gift he received about three weeks ago from a legislative liaison from the state Library of Ohio.

Oh man...that guy got owned! What a porn-lover and pig liar! Yeah like "I don't know" BS! hahahahaha!

EDIT

But on the other hand, I just had a thought. Politicians don't know shit about computers anyway...so what if this guy was pwned by some prank? But I think the the drive was probably configured to open up the images automatically! Haha...that might explain it.

Still LOL.

.....Good thing we didnt vote for him....voted against him....is this some new democrat porn ring to get school students to be porno's? I say the image came from him, I mean if he had the usb thumbstick the whole time, then obviously it's his secret pr0nz collection, and the students laughing isnt at all suspicious, I would laugh too if a image completly different than what I expected showed up.

There's a good chance it's a prank.

I'm going to assume he had other people assemble that presentation for him, and for whatever reason, a disgruntled employee, (or Karl Rove ) got their hands on it and put the topless image on there.

True nikki, but still, the last statment of "there were some students snickering" gives no influence to me of this being a set up by a student, because if I was there I would either laugh, or be confused and laugh.

But it's the advanced politics class, so I'm sure a lot were super serious.

Plus, if I saw a topless women in a politician's speech, more power to them. After all, politicians are always hiring speech-writers to make their speeches remotely interesting... intermittent topless nudity could be one hell of a way to cut costs, and garner votes

Please, as if it matters. We need to focus on the real crime here. Forcing a bunch of high schoolers to sit and listen to a lawmaker.

I highly doubt that it was his own doing.

Probably at some point in the day, some students maybe found the stick and put the content on there? Just a thought.

But as said by someone before, there is no way he wouldn't of known it was on there, and if he did, he would know what it was. I highly doubt a person who is speaking at a school would even risk getting caught with that content on them.

What kind of crappy memory stick opens a JPEG the moment you put it in? Did the little "What do you want this to do" window not pop up? Or does he store his porn in Powerpoint presentations?

Oh, no, not porn! Say it ain't so! Oh, the humanity!

I swear, people in this country get more shaken up about somebody seeing nudity than they do about people getting fucking murdered. Folks need to get their priorities in order- I might be able to understand this sort of appalled reaction if- and only if- nudity were a universal taboo, but it isn't.

That, and... HIGH SCHOOL. Not middle school, not elementary school, not kindergarten, not preschool. High school. Does anyone here actually subscribe to the belief that the vast majority of kids attending public high schools haven't seen boobs before? I'd be far more concerned about the kids doing heroin under the stairs, or flaunting gang colors, or hazing other students. Hell, I'd be more worried about them smoking a cigarette out on the lawn; at least that has some damaging effect. C'mon, people- they're just boobs. This is the twenty-first fucking century; you'd think people would have realized by now that seeing a pair of hooters doesn't scar kids for life.

Talk about making mountains out of mole-hills...

I thought most computers had removable drives configured in the same way as CDs, in that they run an autorun.inf when it's inserted. I know my 2GB memory stick automatically loads the PortablApps Menu when I stick it in the hub.

In my fine ancient tradition of reporting on PowerPoint self-pwns to the Renegade Community, I bring you this new PowerPoint horror story:

Quote: Priest in gay porn probe leaves parish

Belfast, Northern Ireland (CNN) -- An Irish priest at the center of a gay porn controversy has asked to leave his parish and take sabbatical leave from the priesthood, he said Sunday.

Father Martin McVeigh has admitted he destroyed a memory stick containing "inappropriate imagery" ahead of a church investigation into reports he accidentally showed pictures of naked men to parents of children preparing for their First Holy Communion.

The incident happened at the start of a PowerPoint presentation at a grade school in Pomeroy, County Tyrone, Northern Ireland in March, said the leader of the Catholic Church in Ireland,

Cardinal Sean Brady.

Parents said in a statement they were "horrified" by what they saw and called for action to be taken against the priest.

The church reported the incident to police, who said no crime had been committed.

In a statement Sunday, McVeigh apologized "for the hurt caused" and "his failure to check his presentation in advance."

However, he insisted he "was not responsible for the presence of the offending images and in this respect I ask you to accept my innocence."

The priest also confirmed he had destroyed the memory stick that contained the images.

He said: "After the images were inadvertently shown, I immediately removed the memory stick from the laptop. In my shock and upset and in my concern to ensure that the images would never be shown again, I destroyed it later that evening."

McVeigh described the past month as "the most difficult" of his life and said he would be taking a break.

"In the hope of bringing resolution and healing to the division and pain within the parish, I have taken the decision to ask Cardinal Brady to allow me to leave the parish of Pomeroy and to take sabbatical leave," said McVeigh, adding: "The memory of this awful episode will remain with me for the rest of my life."

Brady said he accepted McVeigh had no advance knowledge of the pornography.

In a statement Sunday, Brady said it had been "a traumatic time for the whole parish community and for Father McVeigh personally." The cardinal also apologized for the incident.

He issued an update on the church investigation, saying other computers used by McVeigh had been "forensically examined by an independent technical expert and no inappropriate imagery has been found."

Brady added an additional laptop stolen from the local church sacristy since the March 26 meeting "did not form part of the technical examination."

The cardinal said he had accepted McVeigh's request for leave on the understanding he would return to the diocese on its completion.

The latest controversy comes after a series of child sex abuse scandals involving Catholic Church clergy in Ireland. The government-backed investigations say thousands of children have been abused by priests and other church figures over the last 80 years.

In March, the Vatican released a major report into the problem, begging forgiveness from victims. However, victims hit out at the report's finding that new safeguards are working.
