Do you even know what a DDoS is? Like a hardware firewall is just gonna stop that lmao And the forums have been up the whole time, you just can't access the forums through smak.clanwars.cc, you need to use the IP address.

Sending too much packets to a computer can result in hardware failure temporarily or permanently, If I recall.

If you have a fast enough processor and a good firewall, it can sometimes discard the packets fast enough.

I'm not too sure if that's correct, So please do correct me of I'm wrong.

Sending such an amount of packets that either the processor(s) of the server can't keep up, or, more likely, sending such an amount of packets that the internet connection can't handle the amount of data. This is really possible, even if the server is connected to a 100Mbit/s line. Specially when they use a botnet it's not that hard.

DoS is not very specific at all. There are many ways to do it including flooding, crashing, etc. DDoS just means its distributed over multiple computers, so the attack cannot be traced to a single source.

One win against NF when you were smurfing, congrats.

Three flaws...

1. you don't get bragging rights for a game when you were smurfing
2. how many games have you lost to NF?
3. what's your win ratio against H2O? assuming you summoned up the balls to play them at all, which would surprise me

BartGg wrote on Sun, 28 October 2007 14:29every think you typed just there is a lie.

Which bit

"And still nobody likes or respects you..."

god knows that's true

"no, I suspended him for a very brief period for posting messages from a banned person. His signature is a joke, he's quoting something I SAID as a joke... only someone as thick as you would actually believe it."

that's true too... like I said, it takes a special kind of dimwit to believe something TD and I were joking about, but then you are indeed a special kind of dimwit

"The same reason: posting for banned people, which has always been a suspendable offence." true, again

"Banning people for breaking the rules doesn't make me "power hungry". I've been saying for a while that you need to take a break, i.e. turn your computer off, go outside, get some fresh air, maybe make some friends in the real world instead of sitting alone in a dark room every day getting angry in front of your computer screen."

you're proving this is true as well. Newsflash: this is a game, it's for fun, you aren't supposed to get as angry over it as you do.

When you seriously want a fight in real life because you're angry at them calling you a geek or w/e... I'm sorry, but there's no nice way to say this: YOU NEED TO FUCKING SORT YOUR LIFE OUT
