Wow way to take yourself too seriously. The video is perhaps one of the most digusting and morbid things on the internet and is worthy of discussion.

Since I never heard of this, I did a quick Google web search "2 girls 1 cup" and scrolled through the results till I found this:

Quote:Urban Dictionary: 2 girls 1 cupThe act of multiple(2) partners(girls) deffacating into glassware(1 cup) and then performing sexual acts with the fecal matter. 2 girls 1 cup ...

I am not watching this video.

Its not whether its worthy of discussion or not, but the fact that I know people are going to look it up, watch it, and return in disgust and offended. I can't help whether they do it or not, but still, I would not have shared something like this for that very reason. Its just best not to provoke a persons curiosity like that.

Gross it may be, but why is everyone getting so defensive?

People want to look it up, it is their decision. They get offended, too bad... What does it matter to you if some random person in California watches a disgusting video and gets "offended"....? It wasn't even you who proposed to watch the video..

But even so, if it bothers you that much, why not just tell everyone else "Hey, this video maybe found offensive to some, and I would advise you to not watch it." That is to say instead of insulting the thread starter..

If you try to solve a problem with another problem... that just means you have 2 problems.

Good job in completely missing Dave's points.

Curiosity is a powerful human emotion which most humans submit to to defeat it. It takes strong (but easily attainable) self-control to subdue curiosity. Go figure.

And incite more curiosity? Then it makes sense not to spread the word in the first place.

It's all Pandora's fault for Death, Sickness, and Evil in the world.

Edit: No, the topic is a place to discuss it. However if people know they are going to be expecting something gross, that most likely will eliminate the curiosity. No?

Case and point: I never seen the video. I only heard it was gross. And I have no intention of going to see it.

My reason for the way I posted was due to the topic author, mostly. He didn't post any kind of warning, and the context of his post is just idiotic and comes across childish, though I do give him cheers for not posting a link. I expect nasty, no-good videos from the context of the title, but others might be, as JBall put it, a bit too stupid to do the same.

I missed his point, or did you miss mine?

I don't give a fuck what "curiosity" can do to a person. It still doesn't take away from the fact that it's their own personal decision to bow to their curiosity. They, obviously, had to go through the trouble to Google it and then proceed to click on the link. It's not as if Rocko posted the link and they clicked on it before they noticed what they were doing.

Plus, if you're that disturbed by what you see, then it'll do you some good to be desensitized from the "horrors" of humanity.

I misread. Sorry.

cheesesoda wrote on Wed, 07 November 2007 00:02 I don't give a fuck what "curiosity" can do to a person.

Because you don't give a fuck doesn't mean curiosity did not play a crucial role in making people reach a decision. I think personal decision is the final say but it is stupid to ignore the strong intravening forces if they are present.

cheesesoda wrote on Wed, 07 November 2007 00:02 It still doesn't take away from the fact that it's their own personal decision to bow to their curiosity.

You nicely evaded discussing about curiosity by saying "I don't give a fuck" and went right into your favorite all-time "personal decision" bullshit.

I agree completely that personal choice is the last say but in this case, curiosity can weaken the resolve of the person making the personal choice...hence making a personal decision much harder but still attainable. Curiosity played a part, no matter.

cheesesoda wrote on Wed, 07 November 2007 00:02 They, obviously, had to go through the trouble to Google it and then proceed to click on the link.

You are telling personal choice made them do this? Or was it curiosity?

NOTE: I am not presenting curiosity as an excuse to do something but as a natural human reaction that has to be dealt with before making a personal decision.

Starbuzz...uriosity is POWERFULOL...

I understand what curiosity is and what it does. There's a reason why the saying "curiosity killed the cat" exists.

Why do my arguments always funnel back to my all time favorite "personal responsibility" argument? Because regardless of how you twist it, a person is still 100% responsible for their reactions even if you claim there's some underlying force pushing someone to make that decision.

See, this is why I hate liberals... they try to excuse everything to sugarcoat it all. It's what drives Al Sharpton and Jesse Jackson to keep opening their mouths. It's what wastes billions and billions of dollars on welfare and education. Compassion is a good thing, but it becomes dangerous when you're willing to pretend that everybody is 100% good, and only their decisions are bad. Sorry, but a healthy tree doesn't bear bad fruit. Or as they say, GIGO.

Look, when I say this, I am nowhere near excluding myself. I hold myself accountable to all the stupid actions. I was fired from my previous job (regional retail chain) because I stole from them. Why did I steal from them? Because I hated my job so much, and I was a gullible guy, so when my co-worker suggested the scheme, I happily obliged. Now, we can try to excuse my actions by saying that it wasn't entirely my fault because I hated the place I worked for and I was easily sucked into it because I was gullible. I realize you admit that I still made the bad choice, but are you going to lessen the blame on me because of the "underlying reasons"? You shouldn't.

I haven't been following your argument, but:

Acting on Curiosity = Purposely and distinctively preforming

It doesn't matter your level of curiosity, you still need to put in the work to do what ever your curious about.

You see a box, and think: "Hey, I wonder what is in that box." Than you go and open it. You purposely act upon the box to open it, requiring your own conscious to do so.

Curiosity isn't some form of mind control that makes you do things that you don't want.

Also, like I said above, I haven't followed much of the argument, so I have no idea who's side I took... or if any side..

TBH, there were no sides.

Both of us were saying the same thing but unfortunately, some people can only see in black and white. The moment I brought up curiosity, I was labeled by our well-educated political commentator Jball as a Liberal and from then on...all his arguments were misdirected at a person who he thought was a Liberal but was not.

I have no stinking idea what a fucking Liberal is...I have rather liberal views but I am very practical about things. I NEVER said that and I believe curiosity is not an excuse in this situation. Read topic please.

I merely said that human emotion also played a part but NEVER said curiosity was a mind control that made the person do the deed. To assume that is what I was saying was purely ignorant and shows that some people need some basic analytical reading skills.

When he said "I don't give a fuck what curiosity does," and the way he wrote, it seemed to me that Jball was not acknowledging basic human emotion WHICH is the reason I started arguing and this whole dumb thread became serious. Well, he did clarify that later and I cooled off. Just more evidence that it helps to not be vague in the first place.

That's logic!

Oh, and my tirade on liberals, Starbuzz, wasn't really directed at you. It was just an observation I have on (too many) liberals (don't get confused with 'classic liberals' -- libertarian in US politics). It's just the whole "people are good, and only decisions are bad" ideology which rejects the idea of personal responsibility.

Err...don't ever fucking write words for me, fool. I never said "I have really liberal views."

Clarification: Overall I fall in the left-middle of the political sprectrum but not into any Liberal group or party.

You are one arrogant fool (your favorite ad hominem word!), aren't you? So self-important that you're getting all pissy because that's not exactly what you said. He didn't quote you, did he? No, so he doesn't need to be 100% accurate, and his words were in a mocking-fashion, so they're going to be a bit exaggerated.

Okay this is Renegade forums, not rotten.com This topic is neither a Heated Discussion, nor a Debate, but rather another one of Rocko's inane posts.

I'm putting this one to bed for now, before it gets out of hand
