The music you get on iTunes has DRM, doesn't it? Thus, utterly pointless.

If you legally own the file, I don't see why it would be "illegal" for you to download an mp3 of it from p2p and use it for personal use.

Very good point. Never though of it that way. I'll try that, but it would be a lot faster to have a converter. So, if you guys can find anything let me know. Until then, problem solved.

xD

Itunes songs cant be converted, against the law, back then someone made a converter for the old itunes, but then they shut down because itunes was GONNA $UEz0r THEM.

meh if you want DRM free music, go to Amazon.com, they'll give you the mp3 file without any protection, or go buy the Cd, rip the music.

Plug your headphone jack into your microphone jack, and use Audacity to record the file.

Simple, really.

Not all iTunes store stuff does. Anything tagged "iTunes Plus" is DRM-free (mostly EMI stuff).
