You are wearing a blindfold and thick gloves. An infinite number of quarters are laid out before you on a table of infinite area. Someone tells you that 20 of these quarters are tails and the rest are heads. He says that if you can split the quarters into 2 piles where the number of tails quarters is the same in both piles, then you win all of the quarters. You are allowed to move the quarters and to flip them over, but you can never tell what state a quarter is currently in (the blindfold prevents you from seeing, and the gloves prevent you from feeling which side is heads or tails). How do you partition the quarters so that you can win them all?

Actually, you didn't explicitly state we submit our finished piles several times over, so you could just keep trying.

Imao

Without loss of generality, let's say you have 7 coins, 5 of which are tails. I claim you can choose any 5 of these 7 coins, flip your chosen coins, and the number of tails in the chosen set and the remainder set will be identical.

7 coins, 5 of which are tails.

Chosen                    Remainder
HTTHT                    TT

Flipped chosen            Remainder THHTH                    TT
thus something like this:

chosen = 20, remainder = *infinity - 20*
flip those 20, your done. the number of tails is now equal in both piles ^^

_____
maybe a diff one? lmao

I've done this one before. You can't see the door of the bus so it must be travelling right, although on your picture there's no windows or anything either.

So in conclusion, draw better.

It depends on where you live in the world.

In the US, the door to the bus is on the right side, because the driver is on the left.

However other countries may have it vise versa.

Yeah, true LOL...back in my country, there are 2 doors on the left side (driver sits on right) and there is a ladder in the back so people can get up and sit on top of the bus!

ok on the bus one, it could be movinbg either way, and i was just looking for the why. the why was the door missing.

also, i couldent exactly DRAW the stupid thing, ascii was the only thing, as i suck with photoshop and paint...

and for the sentence, 'had had' is grammatically correct, and if your talking about a paper report, i easilly could say "i had had "had had". "had had" had had humored my teacher as she read my report."

and you still have yet to answer this question: "why is there no correct answer to this question?"
lmao ^.^

lastly, its an off topic forum, ill post riddles if i want.

The next question I have for you, has only been asnwer by a few.

From house to house I go, sometimes narrow, sometimes wide.
And whether there is rain or snow I always stay outside.

And thirdly I last for you. It seems to puzzle quite a few. But if you ponder for a while, the answer will come with a smile.

I ask that you translate these words:

REASM NCNVE OTMLE SEHST TAOEI

"The door missing" is not a valid direction. It is either left or right... and it isn't a valid riddle because different buses in different countries are arranged in ways that the Drivers could be on either the left or right side of the bus. So that means the door can also be on either left or right side of the bus. And that means there is no wrong answer to the riddle... I mean unless your answer was up or down... Either left OR right would work depending on where you live.

Solve that, pricks!

Whole Thing
One fine day in the middle of the night,
Two dead men got up to fight,
Back to back they faced each other,
Drew their swords and shot each other,

One was blind and the other couldn't, see
So they chose a dummy for a referee.
A blind man went to see fair play,
A dumb man went to shout "hooray!"

A paralyzed donkey passing by,
Kicked the blind man in the eye,
Knocked him through a nine inch wall,
Into a dry ditch and drowned them all,

A deaf policeman heard the noise,
And came to arrest the two dead boys,
If you don't believe this story's true,
Ask the blind man he saw it too!
