Without SK's coding we wouldn't have a custom scripts.dll. 'nuff said.

No, without me there wouldn't be bhs.dll or any of that stuff. Script.dll was made before that.

Jonwil keeps our "modding community (pfft)" alive, but Sir_Kane is the better coder of the two, there is no question about that (keep in mind that there's nothing forcing either one to contribute in a way or another to this game).

Rocko gets kicks off getting insulted because he thinks that gives him importance.

Scrin can't do shit.

Wait... Disregard that, he can steal stuff.

Yea, I also think Sir_Kane is a better coder.

It's just that he trolls around and show's off more than releasing stuff. If he did release stuff, he'd be more of a respected member of the community.

If you released things as public betas, it would help you find bugs faster.

You wouldn't look like an idiot because you have released it as a BETA. Its bound to crash and throw a fit once in a while.

Then try and debug them. >.> Everyone realises that almost nothing is bugless, but people would still love some of the things you could release, bugs or not.

It is blatantly obvious that no one in this topic understands the workload behind debugging and fixing complex and buggy code. You can't just "try and debug them" and expect to fix complex code in a short timespan.

It is not expected to happen in a short timespan. I'm just saying to do several tests and look over the code.

You would only understand what debugging is like if you were a coder.

Could take hours to find the most simplest stupid mistake, and all I make is websites which is relatively simple compared to advanced applications and/or plugins.

Oh yes, took me hours to figure out why some RG code wouldn't compile on linux, just to figure out someone (ta-Kane) put a ":\" smiley into it.
