You can actually use any wav sound you want. Just rename it to "Correction_3.wav" and throw it in your Data folder.

Would it work with, say, a .mp3?

I specifically said .wav because it has to be a wav. I have had no luck with MP3s.

Maybe if you used an MP3 -> Wav converter?

Yeah that would work, but I only said that because of sadukar saying it didn't need the .wav extension.

You are going to convert it by WINDOWS way, it won't work as well as a real converter. Though you don't need the .wav extension anyway.

Something as small as a boink sound should be .wav anyway.

Decoding mp3 files for something as small as 1-3 seconds long, over and over again uses too much processing power, which slows down the game...

And actually, Sadukar, you're wrong. Window's doesn't convert files just by adding an extension, you just make it think that's the file extension.

Zion Fox wrote on Wed, 09 January 2008 13:26you just make it think that's the file extension. Trues! Because you can change the file extension and it will still not work (almost 90% of the time).

I said .wav because I figured since I already said it had to be a wav file, converting it to a wav would be redundant.

That's what I meant >_> Its like changing a text file into a .avi

Mine is the American GI from RA2 saying HOOAH!

Yes it must be correction_3.wav exactly but as above you'd need a prog to convert from WMA/MP3/Whatever

I agree with Jeep Rubi, I love the "boink.

sadukar, I know exactly what renaming a file extension does in Windows -> nothing.

And The Elite Officer, what is up with your constant bullshit posts?
