Pregnant Marine's grave apparently found

Quote: JACKSONVILLE, N.C. - Authorities said Friday they believe they found the shallow grave of a pregnant Marine in the back yard of a comrade she accused of rape, along with evidence inside his home that suggested she had been killed.

Investigators are treating the case as a homicide, said Onslow County Sheriff Ed Brown. But the prime suspect left a note insisting Lance Cpl. Maria Frances Lauterbach had killed herself, Brown said.

After some slight digging in a fire pit discovered in the yard of Marine Cpl. Cesar Armando Laurean, detectives found what "appeared to be burnt human remains," Onslow County District Attorney Dewey Hudson said Friday night.

"We think we have found what will (contain) the skeletal remains of Maria Lauterbach," Hudson said. Authorities placed a tarp and two white tents over the area and planned to begin slowly scraping the earth with garden tools Saturday morning.

Lauterbach, 20, vanished three weeks ago, days after she talked to military prosecutors about a rape case against Laurean, who remains at large. Authorities said Friday that information from another woman, a former Marine, left them certain that she is dead.

Before fleeing Jacksonville on Friday, Laurean left a note that said Lauterbach had "come to his residence and cut her (own) throat," Brown said.

But crime scene investigators found blood stains and obvious signs of that a cleanup had taken place inside the home, Brown said late Friday.

"Evidence now is showing that what he claimed happened didn't happen," Brown said.

Authorities learned about the note from Laurean's wife, a person familiar with the investigation told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because the investigation is ongoing. In the note, the person said, Laurean wrote that he had nothing to do with Lauterbach's suicide, but that he had buried her body.

Laurean's wife Christina is "heartbroken," said her mother, Debbie Sue Shifflet.

"I feel sorry for the other family," Shifflet said. "It's horrible what they're going through. My heart goes out to them."

Authorities on foot and all-terrain vehicles searched Laurean's neighborhood near Camp Lejeune on Friday. Megan Melton, who lives nearby, said dozens of vultures had descended on the area in the past few weeks.

Although the outdoor search was suspended for the night, investigators from the State Bureau of Investigation moved indoors and began a search for blood and other evidence inside his one-story, brown brick ranch home.

The search continued late Friday for Laurean, a 21-year-old from Clark County, Nev., who had refused to meet with investigators and apparently left the area without telling his lawyers where he was going, the sheriff said.

Lauterbach met with military prosecutors in December to discuss pursuing rape charges against Laurean, said Kevin Marks, supervisory agent with the Naval Criminal Investigative Service at Camp Lejeune. He said military prosecutors believed they had enough evidence to argue that the case should go to trial.

In court papers filed this week, prosecutors said the anticipated birth of the baby "might provide evidentiary credence to charges she lodged with military authorities that she was sexually assaulted." Lauterbach reported the rape in April and was due to give birth in mid-February, authorities said.

In a brief interview with reporters outside the family's home in Vandalia, Ohio, Lauterbach's uncle, Pete Steiner, said the rapist was the father.

Authorities said they were not concerned that Laurean would flee because they had information the pair carried on a "friendly relationship" even after she reported the assault to military authorities. There is no indication Lauterbach asked the military to protect her after she leveled the rape allegations, investigators said.

Steiner, however, said his niece didn't have any kind of relationship with her attacker, and that Lauterbach had been forced to rent a room off base because of harassment at Camp Lejeune.

"She was raped," Steiner said. "The Marines, unfortunately, did not protect her, and now she's dead."

Originally from Dayton, Ohio, Lauterbach was reported missing Dec. 19 by her mother, who last spoke with her daughter on Dec. 14, authorities said. Her cell phone was found Dec. 20 near the main gate at Camp Lejeune, and she missed a Dec. 26 prenatal care appointment.

Lauterbach was assigned to the 2nd Marine Logistics Group of the II Marine Expeditionary Force, based at Camp Lejeune. She joined the Marines in June 2006, and had not been sent to either Iraq or Afghanistan. Laurean worked in the same unit, where both were personnel clerks.

Steiner said Lauterbach had four siblings. Worried about the difficulty of raising a child while a single Marine, she had talked with her family about putting the baby up for adoption, he said.

According to court documents filed this week, Lauterbach's mother told investigators that her daughter was bipolar and had a history of compulsive lying. Steiner said the family wanted to give authorities a fair and accurate impression, and that while Lauterbach tended to stretch the truth in stressful situations, "she was not a compulsive liar."

"We're all going to miss Maria horribly," Steiner said. "She was a big part of our lives. What I personally hope comes out of this is that victims of sexual assault in the armed services will be taken more seriously and this will be handled differently in the future."

Look whos talking Mr. Bash Bush.

What do you think Clinton would have done... what can Bush do? I don't condone it. I'm just saying, it happens all around the world and just because it happened to a Marine, which since she was a marine she should have been able to defend herself, doesn't mean that it is the fault of the US government, it's the fault of the marine corp. So stfu you retarded dumbfuck and stop thinking with your assheaded emotions.

prasp, I think you want controversy to happen in the government. These types of things happen everywhere. This includes gasp the military! He should be punished, yes. However, by your post title you make it sound as if everyone in the American Army is raping others. I don't think anyone, anywhere said that a person in the American Military is incapable of raping another individual.

Prasp does have a point but there needs to be a limit in his logic since it is pretty much littered with generalized anti-American conspiracy garbage.

While dumbasses can be found in any military, claiming them all to be dumbasses is wrong since there are many who fight honorably.

Sure, we don't live in a clear-cut black and white world and I ain't a brainwashed flag-worshipping zombie either. But I dislike random accusations founded on raw hate and emotion without rationality.

There are multiple problems with the first post in this topic.

The title of the post implies that the American Army ordered 2 or more males to rape one or more females on more than one occasion (Quoting topic title: 'Mass Rapes', plural). However the post only implies a single male raping a single female, which cannot be considered to be mass rape.

The title also implies, as mentioned before, that this rape was ordered by the American Army. However the rape was the action of a single man not acting under orders from the American Army, hence it cannot be considered that the American Army committed rape, but that a single male committed rape, and it just happens to be the case that he is in the American Army. If a Tesco employee (or other supermarket chain) commits rape, that does not mean Tesco commits rape.

Furthermore, the title states that the American Army is 'Capable' of mass rape. This much is true, because any group containing at least two males is capable of mass rape by the definition of the act, but it does not mean they will actually commit mass rape.

In future, please ensure the title of your topic is relevant to the actual post you make, and please refrain from being a complete and utter twat. Thank you.

No. However, hundreds of individual soldiers after the invasion was over decided to take the aforementioned action stated above, and their higher ups not only did nothing about it but secretly encouraged it, similar to what happened in Poland and the Soviet Union during WW2.

Yes. They secretly encouraged it. Which is why pimply-faced teenagers are writing about it in forums founded on completely unrelated topics. THATS how secret the orders were, right?

Prasp, please stop giving the rest of us with grieviences a bad name. Some of us like to think critically and support our arguements, and you're fucking it up for us.

No, but considering the anti-Muslim attitude that occurred shortly after 911, it is very likely that is what happened.

No actually, I was just acting like the typical conservative who would post mindless posts on how America is the best country in the world.

No, but this article is more credible than Fox News.

May I ask why? The grammar and lack of revision makes it look on par with a middle school student.

"third paragraph" Iraq's Constitution with regard to women's rights was the most advanced in the Middle East

I only glanced at the page when I saw that and decided I didn't want to waste my time.

There's plenty on the Left who do the same.

A typical Conservative doesn't make mindless posts. If you'd some like proof, please scan through any number of my posts on politics.

And your not smart enough to infer that English isn't his native tongue?

Like you actually read the Iraq constitution under Saddam Hussein, which ironically the US supported until he invaded Kuwait.

This topic proves otherwise.

Also read Muad Diab's and Sn1per74's posts.

So, we've gone from "GOVERNMENT ORDERS MARINES TO RAPE PPL!!1!" to "This one isolated rape incident occurred between two members of the marines, and I, prasp, have this giant flimsy theory that perhaps this could be more common than previously thought. Maybe."

Call it what you will. I can't care. But knock this shit off.

I disagree.

Not to say Fox News is credible, but neither is that article.

prasp wrote on Wed, 16 January 2008 02:11Quote:The title also implies, as mentioned before, that this rape was ordered by the American Army. However the rape was the action of a single man not acting under orders from the American Army, hence it cannot be considered that the American Army committed rape, but that a single male committed rape, and it just happens to be the case that he is in the American Army. If a Tesco employee (or other supermarket chain) commits rape, that does not mean Tesco commits rape.

Was I implying it? No, you only heard what you wanted to hear and, hundreds of individual soldiers after the invasion was over decided to take the aforementioned action stated above, and their higher ups not only did nothing about it but secretly encouraged it, similar to what happened in Poland and the Soviet Union during WW2.

Yes, you implied that, because that's what you wrote. Your title clearly says the American Army is capable of mass rapes, by which you are saying the American Army has ordered it's soldiers to go around raping people.

I am not even sure what your talking about here....

So? A truly credible source isn't limited to the research of an individual. Individuals are much more easily corrupt than groups. A truly credible source has an EDITOR to fix these mistakes. Otherwise they may be seen as...oh...let's say...bogus.

So while you say I'm not smart enough to infer that English isn't his first language, you fell prey to his words automatically without even the slightest hesitation because they sounded good to you. You forget that since this is research - There should be some evidence of sources. I see little to none outside the obscure, and this is just at first glance. No links to back up claims, and little by way of further elaboration to the author's vague statements.
