Hey guys, you gotta check out this car. It's one of the slickest I've ever seen.

Yeah, the car's a beauty indeed. I had the pleasure to lust on it with my eyes last week when I spotted one parked on the mall lot.

I've seen one on the road already. It's definitely a beauty.

But I'd rather save some money, and buy this, and let the Audi driver have a good look at my taillights.

I'd have to see it in person to decide, but I think I would buy a Lotus Exige S before one of those. Or I'd go for a Porsche 911 GT3, despite:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Audi_R8#Performance Many publications were hailing it as the first car to truly be able to beat Porsche - considered by many to be one of the best supercars ever made and the leader in its class. Initial comparison tests have proven quite positive in this respect; Evo Magazine in its comparison test between the R8, 911 Carrera 4S, Aston Martin V8 Vantage and BMW M6 have claimed that the Audi is a better supercar saying that "Audi humbles Porsche. A new dawn starts today." Other publications have also made similar reviews of the Audi beating the Porsche in comparison tests.

The Exige S is much cheaper, with similar 0-60 mph, and it's more "green". The top speed difference between the two doesn't make a difference to me, since the Exige's 148 mph is fine. When would I ever fucking get up to 187?

As for my pro-argument for the R8-priced 911: class and sex appeal. I'd love to fuck it. The R8 on the other hand is an absolute slut, and I don't like sluts.

I'd love to have the up coming ZR1 blue devil from Chevy, but I will settle for a delorean and stuff something big in the back.

I will be too tall to drive these tiny supercars you guys are talking about.
@sniper: I heard about that car in 2006 NFS: Carbon.

The R8 is the freshest sports car I have seen in years. I have been following it with earnest interest.

Top Gear has a good review on it, you can find it on YouTube.

Recent confirmation that there is a V12 TDI Diesel in the works is particularly interesting. The car's DNA might be sports car but the engine output in terms of torque screams tactor...http://www.roadandtrack.com/article.asp?section_id=15&article_id=6335

The R8 looks awesome, yet it's not as fast as the price may suggest. It only has 420 HP... It costs 150 Gs. You can get 500+ HP with a Shelby GT for almost a third of that.

Buy a ZR1 for 50K less go 200+

Buy a GT-500 for half of that (ZR1) go 170.

Bingo, horsepower doesn't mean shit if the car can't turn or stop properly.

I also think that some people forget that 400 horsepower is still a crap load of horsepower and will rock your socks when you floor it.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Audi_R8#Technical_details The base price in the US is $109,000.

The handling sucks on the GT500, according to Richard Hammond. Also, the horsepower isn't quite at 500: 447.

Check out the handling reviews on the Lotus Exige S.

I've driven a 10-second car, and currently own a 12 second one. Speed and torque are not everything, and despite what you see on movies like The Fast & The Furious, every streetlight is not a drag race.

The audi is a practical super car. You want 600 hp that you can go show off at the track? Buy a viper. Understand though they aren't fun to drive daily. We've had several in our family before.

As for rear wheel drive american vs awd import. Well the japs, germans, auzis' they all have the right idea here. AWD cannot be beat when built right. It just makes sense and works.

Sure the corvette is one sexy car. Don't push your foot to hard on a corner though or else your down $80 grand.

BTW, I'm not some rice lover. I own a 1974 Nova SS that I'm just finishing a rebuild on. New 450 hp 383 stoker will be going in this spring. Built by me. So far I've replaced every major part of the drive line atleast once. I know my way around it. Oh ya, it's my daily driver this summer.

I have a 66 barracuda, slant six, three on a tree (I will not tolerate that btw), air conditioning, baby blue paint, vinyl top, and has no rust.

Oh, by the way, this is worth about 80K fully restored.

Well I'm not sure about the final price, but as it sits (engine needs work, no seats or carpet) its worth about 25K. A guy that came to shampoo our carpet said that it was worth about 100K.

To me it speaks drive me. Not like some of the other super cars where its like, "Trailer me to the track and open her up!"

Its one of the better selling points to most of the porsches. Had one of those in my driveway a few months ago(yes with snow on the ground). Here's the one:
