Got it, and I liked it but thought it a bit short.

Loved the last strider level and the hotrod as well. (I used to have a dodge charger just like it)

Thoughts?

Played it. I dunno how I missed some of those antlion grubs, though. Did anyone actually do the traveling gnome achievement, or the one where you had to not lose any buildings?

I almost completed the buildings one tonight.

Hint, use the logs against the hunters or hit turbo right before running them over and always carry a magnuson with you to finish the strider quickly.

Hunters are assholes. I always make it my top priority to crossbow them in the face as soon as I see them.

Half-Life 2 to date has one of the best captivating story lines. That goes for anything, not just video games. I nearly cried at the end of Episode 2, but of course someone ruined the ending beforehand.

That's garbage, the HL2 story is almost non-existent and it seems like they make it up as they go along.

I'm not trolling, the series is almost completely full of things that just show up with no explanation at all (Dr. Magnusson, anyone?) and suddenly become part of the plot. You are given very little explanation, if any about what the hell is going on every time the G-Man talks to you, and after three games you think Valve should start to have a coherent storyline. It seems like it won't ever end.

I could just as well say that Command & Conquer has an equally crappy storyline - "omg how dose kane still b alive?!"

It'll all be explained in the end. (Hopefully)

So you haven't finished the game? I could have sworn you'd have to get Defense of the Armament if you beat the game.

Magnusson is a reference to a moment in the opening of HL1, where the player (as Gordon) is able to poke buttons on a microwave and cause the contents of a container inside to explode. A scientist sitting at a table nearby exclaims "My God, what are you doing?!" Valve has been very good at connecting people in HL2 to people and events in HL1; I've yet to find any serious continuity problems in the series thus far.
