Correct me if I am wrong but from my neutral and sometimes n00by observations of American politics, I can see that the Democratic primaries have lasted too long for Obama to last out.

He came in blitzkrieg style, a breath of fresh air with a different message, but instead of winning states and convincing people and pulling ahead of Hillary, he got bogged down on many issues and controversies. He let Hillary win and he only won Guam last week by like 7 votes or something?! Hillary will no doubt be winning more states this week.

Now the momentum he brought into the race has died down. I am seeing White Americans who are convinced this guy is an empty bag afterall. Obama's doom has been accelerated by his stupid big-mouth hateful Christian fanatic pastor Jeremiah Wright who thinks the AID virus was created by the White American government to kill off minorities. What a retired thing to say...

Now I know for a fact most Americans can be easily fooled by their goverment with 1 minute of CNN or Fox news but they are smart enough to not let this slip by this time around. Whites are seeing how crazy Obama must have been to have gone to church every sunday (for how many years? LOL) and listened to his anti-White hateful fanatic Wright preach.

Obama is most definitely not like that and I am sure all his intentions are for the good but with the hateful Black activists (with a grudge against whites) rallying behind him, the whole Obama camp is not presenting a good picture of itself.

With increasing pressure from Hillary closing the gap, and people getting unsure of Obama (he's losing votes), Obama has an added pressure to shake off anti-White thugs like Jeremiah Wright who are spoiling his image for their own selfish agendas. And time is not on his side too.

If thugs like Wright can speak out such bullshit even before Obama has gotten the now distant Democratic nomination, how hard will they cry if he actually makes it into the White House?

I am guessing Hillary gets the Democratic nomination and McCain wins the Presidency.

EDIT

Maybe I am wrong?

McCain FTW.

But Obama will likely win the Democratic race, because he has more delegates, and currently has more 'super-delegates' behind him...

The pastor deal is overblown, and I think most people realize the guy is a nutjob, and will likely not hurt Obama too much in the next few primaries. It might actually give Obama a boost.

The media are saying that was Obama's worst week, which is true, but it's still a pretty awesome one compared to a regular Clinton week...

Oh, and anyone who thinks the Democrat candidates will pull the troops out of Iraq is lying to themselves. It's not feasible. Only McCain seems to have the nuts to say that.

The way I see it, here are our choices:

- 1) Black man with no experience but a solid message
- 2) Divisive hag who'd destroy her own party as long as she got the nomination
- 3) Old man who either a) doesn't know the difference between a Sunni and Shiite Muslim or b) is so old that he is going to get such basic, important things wrong on a consistent basis.

Each of the democrats up for nomination obviously has problems, but to me, the problems with McCain are just too much. I'm really worried about his age. If it was the year 2000, I'd be voting for him, but even my 74 year old grandmother has said he's too old for the job. McCain's VP pick is going to be scrutinized extra hard because there's a decent chance he could die in office (keep in mind the US life expectancy for men is 74 years - he's either 71 or 72, I believe).

He's admitted he isn't well-versed in economic issues, which will come back to bite him in the general. Same for his "100 years in Iraq" statement - although I know what he meant, that still scares a lot of people. He's going to seem out of touch with many voters due to his age and, in my opinion, due to the fact that his wife is a billionaire (remember Kerry's rich ketchup queen?)

Basically what it boils down to is, as an independent, I've seen the Republicans fuck up this country for the past 8 years. It's time to let the Democrats have their turn to fuck it up.

edit - keep in mind that the democrats are going to expand their house and senate majorities in November. If McCain does win, expect no partisan legislation to be passed for at least 2 years.

How did the Republicans mess it up? This supposed "recession" we are going through has barely touched anybody in this country besides those people who live in Detroit. And there problem is that only 25% of those in high school graduate.

Well, I'm not too sure. McCain is well liked by many Democrats, and has had very public support from Joe Lieberman, among others.

McCain is about bringing consensus. People, especially those in Europe, will often accuse him of being another 'Bush' , but McCain is a smart guy: he believes in sound fiscal policy, raised the 'global warming' alarm bell before many even heard of 'global warming' , and he understands that apes were the predecessors of humans.

Even if a Democrat enters the White House, they will be as hawkish as Bush in terms of international conflicts. Make no mistake, just like the Truman, and Eisenhower Doctrine's, the Bush Doctrine, of pre-emptive strikes, unilateral action, and the right to intervene wherever America sees fit will likely govern American foreign policy for at least 50 years.

I don't mind either candidate McCain or Obama, but McCain will win.

Only because the public sees all the bad things about Obama. Hillary is basically gone (thank god), but before all that was going on there were negative hits against the democrats... Hillary hitting Obama and vis versa.

The public only saw bad things about them. And what about McCain? he was just sitting their peacefully on the side lines watching them fight it out.

Now that Hillary is going out (or will be going out), and that Pastor keeps talking bad things about Obama, the only thing people will see are bad things about Obama. This means that even though some people don't like McCain, they will vote for him anyway because he looks like Mr. Perfect.

Hilary is the one who is more dangerous to McCain.

Obama may appeal to dewy-eyed college students, and Oprah viewers, but Hilary does a better job with communicating to middle-class Americans, especially white, middle-aged guys. After all, most of those guys will refer to the wives as their 'better half' , and probably see a lot of their partners in Hilary.

I dunno if it's so much 'slow' as it is, perhaps a little too (for a lack of a better word) 'majestic' . The guy gives excellent speeches, and can inspire people.

However, Jane and John SixPack don't want 'inspiration' when their house's value drops plunges like a rock because all their neighbours foreclosed because of shifty mortgage terms.

Plus, there's something about Obama that just rubs me the wrong way. I'm not sure what it is.

It doesn't matter if he talks slow, as long as he says the right thing. Hillary on the other hand doesn't look like she works very well under pressure.

I haven't really watched all the debates, but a while ago I watched one in my government class between Hillary and Obama.

I noticed that after every question that was asked of her, she said something either completely irrelevant or generalized the question before she said anything actually pertaining to the question. And most of the time Obama or one of the people asking the questions had to say something. It was very obvious she was stalling to think of something to say, where as Obama had answers as soon as the question was given out.

He didn't say much, but what he did say handled what was needed.

It was that debate where Hillary complained that she was always asked the first question and spent 5 minutes ranting on how she always needs to answer first...

To Me McCain seems like he will try to keep together this mess we are in with government spending out of control and no sight to an end to this war. He will continue to spend money and dig us farther into debt.

Democratic candidates well after what I have seen I can't even go there.

I am most likely to vote for Ron Paul. He is the only republican to end this war and cut defense costs as well as eliminate the IRS, Federal Reserve, Department of Education, Department of Homeland security, and every other useless department that we poor millions into. He will eliminate federal income taxes and cut government spending. He will also secure our borders and actually follow the constitution. Ron Paul gets my vote just look him up

We're all pretty familiar with Ron Paul. The only problem is, Ron Paul has absolutely no chance to win the Republican nomination unless McCain falls over dead. Even then, I'm not sure how they would go about deciding the nominee.

If you want to support Ron Paul's ideals, I'd suggest looking up and supporting Bob Barr. He's running for the Libertarian Party ticket.

Hilary can't get the nomination, the only reason she's continuing her campaign is because she's 30 million dollar in debt.

Knowing US media, McCain's free ride will be over when he's president (that would be hilarious) or when it's obvious he can't win.

Well, once again, it looks like we're in another "Fuck, none of the candidates seem like people I want leading this country" scenario. But, if I'd have to pick, it'd be McCain. While not my favorite choice (I'd much rather Ron Paul, seeing as how, y'know, he'd ACTUALLY do something for "change" that the Democrat candidates like to run around saying they'll do), it's better than a ridiculously socialist bitch who's more corrupted than every politician combined, and a guy who constantly makes fuck ups on his speeches, and really wouldn't do much to help this country, unless you count his shitty international policies as "Helpful".

The redneck bit was kinda sarcastical. The keyword was racist anyway. Could be any idiot thats good with a gun and thinks that he is doing the right thing due to his upbringing really. I am not syaing that there isn't such a risk with every president (or any politician for that matter), but I think that because their still is alot of racist residue left in the US Obama has a much higher likelihood.

Thats the problem with being a politician that brings on a big change/revolution. There will always be some wacko's who think your doing it wrong and theres always the chance one of them grabs a gun or something else to "fix" it.

It is not always limited to just one wacko. Most of the time, the "one wacko" is just a cover story; he is merely the end tool of a bigger secret group that would be negatively affected by a politician who is trying to bring change; change that would displace the group. So, they would have to kill him.
