If you can see the card in Windows explorer when you plug the camera in to your PC, an undelete program should work.

Oh, and hello!

The thing with flash memory is that the way it works, it's really finicky with the way you can retrieve data. You'll probably want to take it to a professional to see, if anything, what they can do.

VLC sucks, the quality I get in it sucks.

Just download a codec pack and use any WMP or Winamp.. or something.

I has to agree, CCCP is a good codec pack.

Learn to change the settings, VLC looks fine. That or your video files are shit themselves.

Besides, recommending an essentially universal player is easier for everyone than pointing to some codec "pack".

I'd rather download a few *.dlls than a full program with codecs and clutter up more space even though WMP is pre-installed.

And what video settings? Enabling hardware acceleration and resolution? the video was also a DVD.

To me, nothing appears in a logical place, but I do tend to see the world sideways compared to other people.
