You never know with EA but from what I understood, there have been precedents for other games and what matters most is that the majority of the community can support the patch. That's also why it's very important that we discuss the changes in here.

Madrocks is right. EA should not get any credit in this patch.

If you don't want EA to get any credit, destroy their Refinery. Duh.

on the contrary, we should absolutely give EA credit for making this a possibility. they get no end of criticism, most of which is justified, so it's only fair that they get praise for finally doing something right in relation to this game.

If the pointfix is forced on us I doubt you will have the community's full support.

Well, while EA shouldn't get credit for the creation of this patch, they definately should get credit on making it possible; that's if the patch makes it to official status.

EA gets credit for publishing, TT gets credit for developing. Hence why you see both the Westwood logo and then the EA Games logo after it in the Renegade intro. Stop being uptight assshats when it comes to EA doing ANYTHING.

I have my personal beliefs against EA, yeah, but that doesn't mean you should bash a company based upon something that hasn't even HAPPENED yet. It's outright childish, and if anything, would turn them AWAY from approving of the patch itself.

Grow up, seriously.

It would be downright unfair to not give credit to EA. They make this possible, they get credit. It's what Cabal said really. You may dislike what EA has done/does/will do, but regardless of that we should be thankful if they make it possible for us to push this patch.

Heh..they made it live a little longer...and squeezed a few more dollars out of what WOL made. Either way...all parties are responsible for something good.
