To sum it all up, you'll be able to have any domain name, so instead of website.com, it can be website.anything

Only for a few million bucks though.

The idea is probably that if you buy it for say 1,000,000 $, you'll resell domain names for it at

I think this is really cool.

Now businesses will be able to categorize their FQDN by any TLD and won't be limited to the current selection, which no one cares about anyways... Everyone goes for .com's even though their site has nothing to do with commercial products.

Will be interesting to see how this plays out, most likely companies will buy out the TLD's with common words/names and whore out the domains to the highest bidder.

Maybe, but according to ICANN the new TLD's will have to go through a verification process.

Quote:Offensive names will be subject to an objection-based process based on public morality and order. This process will be conducted by an international arbitration body utilizing criteria drawing on provisions in a number of international treaties. ICANN will not be the decision maker on these objections.

And it will be mostly domain registrars who will be buying the TLD's so they can profit off the FQDN's sold to everyday customers with personal websites. Whether they would want their company name associated with questionable TLD's I wouldn't know, though.

Edit: I got the quote from this page, you can visit for more info.

For people who don't follow:

FQDN = Fully Qualified Domain Name

TLD = Top Level Domain

example.com is a FQDN

.com is a TLD

Domain registrars sell FQDN's to us. Buying your own TLD for personal use is highly unlikely unless you're rich.

It would be nice if you could take personal issues with another forum member to another place (PM, MSN or whatever). A minimum of respect for other people's choices in life, even the weird ones, seems reasonable enough to me. I'm sure there's enough prejudices against the choices you made in life as well, for you to know that it's not funny to be on the receiving side.

Hey, I'm not saying he can't do as he pleases. I just think that for every action you take, there is going to be people disagreeing with it, and some loud about it. Quite frankly, I'm tired of all of this "tolerance" bullshit. Mostly because nobody is ever as tolerant as they profess. You guys are more than willing to profess "tolerance" for his lifestyle, but then when I make fun of it, I get 10 people jumping down my throat because I was being a complete asshole about it. Well, there went that idea of tolerance.

You know, it's one thing if information about someone's personal life was accidentally released. I would respect the person because they weren't trying to be all, "THIS IS WHO I AM, AND YOU HAVE TO ACCEPT ME" about it. However, it's another thing when the person makes their lifestyle public, and then gets upset when it's not well-received. If anything, that is as childish if not more childish than my attacks. Whenever you open your fucking mouth (or press the submit button on a public forum), you're taking the risk of getting a backlash from it.

You don't see me bitching about this backlash that I'm getting, do you? Of course, you don't because I expect to get people all pissy every time I post, whether or not I intend for it to be controversial and aggravating.

I have no problem accepting the fact that people do things and live lifestyles that I completely and utterly disagree with. While I may not like it, and I'd almost wish that there wasn't such diversity among people, I respect the fact that people are different. I don't respect certain lifestyles, as I see them as nonsensical choices that have no rational basis to them, but I don't try to stop them from being that way.

I have a problem with flamboyance, as I made clear already. If you don't want to be controversial or to have people disagree with how you are, shut the fuck up. It's funny how so many people think they're entitled to people's acceptance when they don't respect others' views, as well.

Otherwise, you should allow all neonazi and terrorist websites as well: what they write down "doesn't matter" anyway. And that's exactly why I wrote what I wrote above.

Behind these nicknames and avatars, we have people that should earn respect as much here as they do out of the Internet. If you disagree with someone's ideas, then you're free to out this disagreement but do it in an objective, logical way.

One thing i'd want to point out, i know many of you think that the furry side of life is just sexual related, and many closed minds think that, and believe it, spreading the word, but that isn't me.

Yes, i've made mistakes in the past where i've posted things i shouldn't have, and said things that didn't need to be said. I was actually in playfully immature moods at those times and i don't take part in, or condone any actions i've said. I was joking around, per se.

YES, some furs are into it for the sex. YES, some do go around humping anything they see, and

YES, you have a good right to point that out. But unless you actually know what i do in the fandom, don't presume that i'm part of that majority that does get into the kinky side of things.

I am looking for a fellow fur mate (partner, whatever you want to call it), but no, i won't be mating with them in fursuits. You don't know how much it costs to buy one of those and keep it in good 'nick', so getting sexual substances on it will ruin it.

To be honest, unless you really know the person you're talking about, don't make presumptions on them based off the majority.

Just wanted to make that clear.

See, people go on with what you give them. It's not like you ONLY said you were a furry. Again, I'll point out you've made mention your tolerance, if not appreciation, of semen. The assumptions weren't baseless.

Plus, my attacks on you being a furry were never about the sexual side of them.
