You should still be able to right click the thing and click run as admin.

Sorry man looks like you're going to have to not be lazy Not sure what that is.

Why are you using the classic skin on Vista? o.O

Checked a few of my progs just to be sure, but I'm gonna go ahead and say that because you have the only user account on the computer, you are an Administrator for the PC by default. The only other 2 accounts are the "Administrator" account, which only shows up when booting in safe mode, and the Guest account, which is just a User level.

Therefore, because you ARE an admin, you can't run the program as an Admin, since it's already running as one.

I do believe its apart of vista protection to stop virus' from running properly that ANY user has to have the program ran in Admin mode to work fully whether you're the only admin or not.

Edit:

SSnipe.. GOOGLE. You've been told this before, I just opened google and type "How to select admin mode with vista" and it returned this lot in as the account administrator and try it? dont know if it will keep the setting when you log in.

start->all programs->accessories->cmd type: net user administrator /active:yes to turn the account aministrator on. restart and log in on that account. Make sure to turn the account off when your done: net user administrator /active:off (i think. Never turned my off, just put a password on it.)

Why do you run Vista on a PC with 800 MB RAM?
