Wait for him to hack your computer and then hit it with a sledgehammer- the force of the blow will transfer through the internet straight into his computer and blow him the fuck away.

^ lol...

If you know who this person is, report them to the police. If you don't, then now would be an excellent time to upgrade your security, especially in the firewall department. Most "hackers" aren't really all that good at what they do, and unless this guy's somewhat decent and has a real case of the ass for you, a good firewall should be all you really need. ZoneAlarm is a good freeware firewall that you should take a good, close look at.

If you're really worried about this and have no other option, disconnect your computer from the threatened network. Losing internet access for a while is better than having some punk screw with your computer.

If you have important files and need to back them up, please develop some common sense and buy yourself a flash drive. Nothing sucks like losing all of your files, and some pissy little internet greifer is hardly the only way that could happen. You can buy a huge external hard drive these days for less than $100US, and flash drives 1GB and under are generally less than $20. If you can afford a computer, then you can afford to back up your files.

Yeah, when I got a downloader virus the first thing I did was pull the cable out of my router. They can't take physical control of your connection, remember and use that.

Idiots. You're supposed to hate on the trolls and fuckwads, not the random newbies. We have plenty of the former two, but not nearly enough of the latter. There are lots of users here who make entire posts out of "lol" and never get bitched at for it- even people who've been here since before the forums changed hands. A little consistency here, please?

sadukar... "newfag?" You ain't been around near long enough to start throwing words like that around. You also can't possibly have 2476 posts in one year and a few months without having crapped out more than your fair share of pointless one-liners.

And will all of you nitwits please, for the love of all things holy, stop quoting large images?! It's funny the first time... but when four posts in a row have the same damn image in them it gets bloody annoying.

While I agree, there are just some things everybody should be reasonable enough to know to not post... whether it be quoting images, posting way too much, or being an insufferable cock to others when they're no better themselves.

That, and "Help sum guy said he could hack internet."
