I don't really feel like PM'ing a big number of members, so just a general reminder. I noticed more and more people get quite huge signatures.

If you want a reference then you can take my signature which seems about border line within the restrictions .

Signatures: These should be nothing more than a small image and few lines of text. Once signatures start getting larger than 8-10 lines of text in size(approximately 450*150 pixels), it distracts from the actual post. The purpose of a forum is to read what other people have to say, not to look at the "pretty pictures" in their signature. The file size of signature should also not exceed 512Kb. If you think that this is too large, you can choose to hide signatures in the Control Panel. Administrators and Moderators reserve the right to restrict your access to the "signatures" feature if you abuse the privilege by using it to violate any of the forum rules.

My signature is less than 512 kb and its height is less than 150 px, but is its width a problem?

Technically speaking it's too big. However, nearly noone respects the theoretical signature rules, so i just try to get those out that are either too big in size, too high or really huge width.

Like Doomkid21's.
