As for what I think: "lolwar"

As for who's in the right? Between Georgia and S.O.: S.O. Between Georgie and Russia: neither.

As for who's going to get the beatdown? If Russia actually uses its military force, Georgia will be flattened.

As for who America should help: None.

RIDICULOUS and BIGOTED how the Western media are focusing more on the Georgian side of the story portraying this as a Russian invasion. Greedy Georgians want to keep SO under their control and they march their army into SO. Russia has attacked back as Russia recognizes SO as an autonomous region within Georgia.

Gee sorry, should Russian be named "greedy" for trying to keep Chechen region in their control? South Ossetia is Georgian territory, would you, if you are a head of state, let a militant group separate from your country?

True, but the military is obligated by some weird law or something to get Americans out of a warzone as soon as possible.

Say hello to the Russia of the 21st Century, everybody!

From what I am seeing, Russia is doing this not only to assert its power in the region, but it's also giving the finger to NATO at the same time.

Georgia really wanted in on NATO, but now with it's borders invaded, it'll likely be very hard for NATO members to approve adding Georgia, because an attack on one member is an attack on all... and the last thing NATO and it's members want to do is attack Russia at the moment.

If Russia gets away with this, who knows what they might attempt next... if the world remains ambivalent, and does not act on this invasion of a country which embraces Western ideals, Russia may try to enter other areas that are contentious. Remember what happened in 1936; this could very well be Russia's 'Rhineland' .

If Chechnya was allowed by Russia to become a sovereign nation, then it would have become a HIVE of Islamic terrorists and a base of operations for future Jihad terrorist operations.

So Russia was correct to take action against the Chechen rebels and put them out of their sick DAMNED God-forsaken misery.

So, in your mind, all Muslims are terrorists? Wow, racist much? I'm sorry, but many of my friends are muslims, and they are good people, it's just a small minority that's making muslims look bad. sadukar09 wrote on Sat, 09 August 2008 08:54South Ossetia is Georgian territory,

NO.

South Ossetia is an independent breakaway region within Georgia. Georgia has no rights over SO as they signed a treaty in 1992 that allows SO to function independently.

So since it is a breakway region with a secessionist boundary with Georgia WITHIN Gerogia, the Russian Federation has gleefully provided economic and military aid. South Ossetians are considered "citizens of Russia" by Moscow.

Hey, let the U.S. provide funds and Stinger missiles to the Chechen rebels.

With this situation at hand, the foolish Georgians and their STUPID president Saakashvili invaded South Ossetia to "restore constitutional order"...in essence, take over South Ossetia. And now they are getting owned bad as they deserve.

Hey, let Russia take over all the former USSR countries, since some of them are "breakaway" countries.

What is even more pathetic for Georgia is that they don't stand a chance to win. Their foolish president Saakashvili has come on TV LYING that Russia is making a full-scale invasion of Georgia! LIAR...Moscow has repeated that the goal of the Russian military operation is to RESTORE the South Ossetian border the Georgians came hoping over.

I'm sorry, but shooting civilians and blowing them up with artilleries don't help your "Peacekeeping" theory.

Saakashvili thought that being a pro-Western guy will automatically grant him military support from NATO countries! haha...NOBODY in Europe wants to get dirty with Russia. Only the US is influential and big enough to help Georgia and even then, still cannot provide any military support.

Russia's armed forces' morale is so low, and with many budget cut, most of their equipment won't work, in a conventional war, even Germany can win.

sadukar09 wrote on Sat, 09 August 2008 08:54would you, if you are a head of state, let a militant group separate from your country?

Your statement is completely irrelavent as that is not the case.

Completely relevant, same situation was faced by Georgian and Russian Presidents.
EDIT: typo

No. But due to the actions of said minority, i.e. Chechen rebels, their entire race paid the price.

Ok, by your logic all Christians are bad because of KKK.

sadukar09 wrote on Sun, 10 August 2008 07:16I'm sorry, but shooting civilians and blowing them

wow

Did I say it was a "peacekeeping" theory? I said Russian forces have come to the aid of their allies to wipe out the enemy that has invaded.

Oh and who started this war? Russians! NO, Georgians started this war by invading the pro-Russian South Ossetians. Russia strikes back in fiercesome force NO DIFFERENT then how Israel reacted to Hezbollah in the summer of 2006. But somehow the fault is with Russia?

And as for your quote above, there is a certain amount of civilian casualties and collateral damage that are an accepted norm in modern military warfare. Russia did not do anything excessive so far other than shelling a city that was OCCUPIED by Georgian troops and attacking Georgian military bases and oil depots deep within Georgia (and in the process killing some Georgian civilians as well).

It seemed to have worked as Georgian forces have fled the city.

Funny when Russia goes to war, civilian casualties are immediately brought up. In the same way, nobody wants to mention Iraqi civilian casualties due to the American invasion. And what about Lebanese civilian casualties due to Israel's war in 2006? I smell hypocrisy.

You didn't, but the Russian did.

sadukar09 wrote on Sun, 10 August 2008 07:16Russia's armed forces' morale is so low, and with many budget cut, most of their equipment won't work, in a conventional war, even Germany can win.

This shows how slacking you have been in keeping current with Russian economic and military development over the past 8 years.

In 2001, President Putin authorized a massive funding program to rebuild the Russian Air Force. In the years after that, other arms of the Russian military has been rebuilt with more funding.

Russia is rich now, the economy has stablized from the tumultous era of the early 90's, and the military has grown stronger. Russia stopped being a broken nation around 2005. They have been strong and getting stronger since.

I'm sorry, is that why the average Russian citizen still live below Western standards?

sadukar09 wrote on Sun, 10 August 2008 07:16Completely relevant, same situation was faced by Georgian and Russian Presidents.

Yeah I don't have a clue at all, you're right. I'm not over there watching what's going on so my opinion on the subject means about as much as your grade school thesis does. The only verifiable fact is that there's an undeclared war going on over there and its repercussions may end up defining the next 10 years if it becomes any bigger than it already is.

To sum up what I'm saying, don't pretend like you know this whole situation inside and out. I doubt being a Pennsylvanian high schooler gives you a huge insight into what's obviously a very complex situation.

I don't need to research your "arguments" to know you're a pretentious ass. You don't know much about the situation beyond what you've seen in mass media and I think it's obvious to most people that what you and I read online from CNN, BBC, etc is going to be just a little bit more tailored to our viewpoints than Russian news agencies would report. My real problem with you is that you're not right, not by a long shot. You're sitting at home behind a monitor while Russia is attacking Georgia and you think you know the answers to the conflict and what sparked it. Go ahead and do another point-by-point rebuttal, that I won't read, if you think it makes you look smart. But don't pretend that you're informed on a situation you've never even come close to seeing for yourself. When you admit that you know nothing and endeavor to correct that ignorance, you'll join the rest of us and try to figure out what's going on over there.

You could just write a bit more about your stance in each post and let us determine what to take from it. Also I think you need to find a synonym for sensationalism. So, you'd shrug it off as nothing if he/she/it faked a deadly disease that might/could/would affect your family members? Or, you.

I have. Granted, I wasn't as close as many, but it's the fucking web. Sure, there could have been more tact used than the whole cancer thing, but everybody getting a dick shoved in their asses over it seems a bit much, too.

Bluesummers from ABP forums..?

I have always found it interesting that the same people who treat others badly on any given day will complain, whine, and otherwise raise hell over someone doing something just a bit worse than what they've done.

For example, the overly sarcastic guy who always ends his vitriolic posts with a complains to the heavens above that someone used cancer as a way to garner sympathy, as if he even knew what sympathy was or how to display it.

I think the problem is that everyone is capable of things that Bluesummers did, and showing people that they aren't a shining beacon of purity makes them start showing how cruel they can be without needing to use cancer as a cover.

When will people learn that others will lie directly to their faces? I mean, if people are willing to lie in person, then there's no reason to believe that people are any more truthful on the Internet. Do people trick themselves into thinking that people are injected with a truth serum before they log onto the web?

You people need to just detach yourselves from the Internet if you get that hurt over something as trivial as lying on the Internet. I'm sure every one of you upset over this whole ordeal has been 100% truthful, especially on the Internet. BECAUSE WE ALL KNOW YOU ARE SAINTS THAT ARE RIGHTEOUS IN PASSING JUDGMENT ON OTHERS.

Oh, my God. WHY CAN'T WE JUST STAY OUT OF OTHERS' BUSINESS? We are far too involved in foreign nations.

South Ossetians voted 99% to secede from Georgia. The ONLY reason why it makes a difference for Georgia is that they want power and money. That's the only fucking reason that makes sense. That and holding people against their will must get them off.

Bush says we can't abandon those that have chosen "freedom". Yes, we can, because they have chosen freedom. Once you choose freedom, you accept the possibility that people will disagree and choose to exercise their freedom and leave. Why suddenly become statist? It's pretty fucking hypocritical if you ask me.

Oh, and fuck this current administration. I tried to be open minded about it. This is just frustrating. The arrogance that our foreign policy exudes is ASTOUNDING. We certainly don't want China bossing us around, so why the fuck do we think we can do the same to others? I'm tired of this invasive foreign policy. I'm tired of the current administration, and I'm fearful that nothing will change no matter which one of the two fucking idiots gets elected.

Welcome to America where liberals want to throw money at our education system in hopes that it'll make our children less of fucking retards. Unfortunately, it's obvious that throwing money won't solve anything because it doesn't take thousands of dollars to teach that the state of Georgia is nowhere near Russia, and if Russia ever attacked the U.S., we can be damn sure they wouldn't start with Georgia.

Why not? I doubt the U.S. would honestly give two shits about Atlanta and Raleigh anyway.

Err... umm... WHAT? You're an idiot. Georgia is not only a country bordering Russia, but it's also a state in the USA.

People during the Cold War Era are older than I am. I trust that the majority of them understand the concept that the Georgia being attacked isn't the state in the Southern US.

lol i know. so who were the n00bs calling the Atlanta help center like Razor says? I don't think they were kids. Kids are busy on the internets today on myspace. My guess is that probably oldies with memory problems who listend some stuff on the radio about Russia and Gerogia in the same sentence and called for help lmfao

I highly doubt that. The older generations don't usually act on impulse like the younger generations do. I doubt they were kids, but I doubt they were middle-aged, either.

Actually the georgian president Saakaschwili is in german television. A talkshow aired by ZDF ... well a little bit anti-russian but still interesting. The georgian president seems to misunderstand the concept of a talkshow.
