Normally I wouldn't say anything but dude, that's slightly immature of you.

People make the comments they do at you because they want you to learn not to make the same mistakes every time. You make a lot of mistakes, sure, but a lot of people do. This is no reason to leave the forum, in fact, it's a better reason to stay and learn from your mistakes and get better at posting.

But, since you're leaving anyway-

Kbye.

I'm leaving because Renegade is a little to old, and there isn't anything really worth posting about Renegade, so I'd rather post about something new and exciting: Reborn. So, bye again.

Don't take this the wrong way, but have you ever considered posting news a bit more reguarly? It might stop a lot of the 'zomg reborn is dead again' posts and keep people interested in the game. Just a thought. An off topic one at that. Meh

Yeah, but the novelty of news wear off after like 2-3 days, 4 max if it is really big news, so that is really a long time between blogs....most go for small updates like every week or so.

Given the regularity of news posts before, this is a vast improvement. Besides, I would rather have a news post actually news worthy, rather than just post small WIP content of say for example a barrel. I would prefer to keep the quality of the news content at the current level or higher, rather than lower it and just throw any old crap in there. We're also a small team, well... There is a large enough team if you really look, but only a few at any one time are active, so it would be hard to post completed work every week that's exciting.

Well, if you only post news once a month, people will start to think that you're barely even doing anything. It's a good idea to keep the community active with news.

When they read the update they will realise why it takes a month to make a news worthy update. Allot has happened since the last update, and the news post will reflect this.

I totally agree with that way of posting news. Better have infrequent useful news posts than frequent uninteresting ones. It's also less time consuming, because you don't have to make a news post about every little thing that changes and it's less time consuming for people too keep up with the mods' progress filtering out the important parts about the progress from the rest.

No offense people, but there is nothing interesting or new to post about Renegade except Tiberian Technologies which just fixes glitches (how boring). Besides everyone mostly posts off-topic threads (including this one ) that don't really have to do anything with Renegade. Anyways, people just accuse me of having a few ol' threads about stuff that are "5 years old" which is very annoying.

P.S. Pawkyfox, I feel as if I must move on from the old, and into the new. We're still friends, right? I hope I see you more on the "General Discussion" section on Reborn more often. I miss you!

Also, u6795, what exactly IS your avatar anyway? It looks like inside a cave or something...
