Nope, you only get one cursor. Even if you have 42 mice installed.

They have it for Mac, and it looks like one for Vista could be on its way.

http://www.dualosx.com/dualosx_en.htm

You'll need a decent setup to run it, though, it seems.

I don't understand the point... 99% of people suck with the mouse on the other hand and even so what good would having two cursors do? Maybe I'm missing something, but who would spend money on this?

That being said, it wouldn't be too difficult to program some sort of app that draws a virtual mouse cursor on the screen and tracks the input of the second mouse. Then you can emulate primary-mouse clicks on the virtual cursor's location when you receive a click event.

Man, I thought you said "Double Moses". FUCK, WHERE IS DOUBLE MOSES WHEN YOU NEED HIM?!

Anyways, yeah, as said, you could probably try and find SOME sort of software out there for this kind of stuff.

I know I've wanted something like this back when my friend and I tried playing Serious Sam (split screen) against each other.

DAMNIT, now Yuri's going to fuck everyone in FPS gaming, causing the whole of FPS gamers to become incredibly pissed off at how much they get beaten online, causing them to go on school shooting frenzies, which results in everyone currently in schools to be dead, which then results in everyone's minds becoming immensely retarded, allowing Yuri to easily mind control the world!
