First of all, I would like to thank everyone who has and continues to work on rg with little to no positive support from the community. You guys and gals rock.

Recently I was wrongfully banned from all jelly servers because I was suspected to have been using cheat name removed. Unfortunately, I don't think cheat name removed has any testable features because of the master switch. This means that the ban stuck without any proof. I don't really blame the moderators anymore because there is not really anything they can do to test for it. Will the next version of rg stop cheat name removed 1.33 and rid the community of this pain in the ass cheat? Any idea on how long until the next rg patch will be released?

Hello unitygood and welcome here.

The TT-patch, on which you can find much info in the "Tiberian technology" - subforum will completely replace renguard. It will also block cheat name removed. However, as with everything that's community driven, it will take some time to get it released.
