The website and its forums are now back online! The old forums were saved after all, so disregard previous messages saying we'd have a fresh start.

Jelly-Gaming website: <http://www.jelly-server.com>

Yea IE is the problem or if you have a router it could be blocking it.

Sometimes it can be the problem(just like FF can sometimes be the problem and if it does not work in FF, I don't think it will work in IE, so Chrome would be answer), if it's not then it could be he is being blocked from it by his router or something else.

Try hard-refreshing it (CTRL+F5). If that doesn't work, go to start, run, type 'ipconfig /flushdns' and hit enter. Now, if all fails, try clearing the browser cache.

You need to register to read. Don't ask me why...

This Command only works if you use Dhcp cuz of your isp.

If you use static ip the above command does not do a thing.

Instead of giving you a permission error, the forum just shows an empty page. Because the forum is loaded within the jelly website, you still see the website buttons.

Websites that require you to login to even see the forums are lame anyway if you ask me. It's a great way to discourage people from joining the site, since some people like to look around the topics and get a feel for the community BEFORE registering on a site. I know I do.

That's an error on my to-do list. It still registers the account, you can login at the forums.
